He immediately took the sausage and quickly shoved it into his quiver. And it so happened that a piece of live coal had got stuck on the sausage but the old man didn’t know. He quickly shut the quiver.

   No sooner had he sat down than the owner of the house came in. They sat down to talk about the children’s health. When they had finished, it was time for the old man to return to his home. Just then, the woman noticed smoke issuing from the quiver and asked the old man; “Paker, how come the quiver is smoking?” The man answered, “Oh. It’s some naughty fire stick with a soft head that smokes whenever it comes into contact with soft wood and the arrows.” The woman kept quiet and got up to escort her guest.

   When they had walked only a short distance, the fire made a hole in the quiver and the arrows fell out, tiak! together with the stolen sausage. The lady, who was walking closely behind, exclaimed: ‘See, had I not known it! Then the old man fearing that his sausage might be eaten shouted, “Oh, my Paker, please do not eat it!”

Then this man who had been living with his wife’s ethnic group moved away with his family and his wife, and after he had walked all day he set up a camp in a certain place. Then he said to his wife, “woman, there is a matter I have to discuss with the people whom we left, and I am going back to them. Pen the animals and wait for me.”

So he went back, and when he reached the village in the evening he sat down in the clearing by the huts, intending to eavesdrop. The people were gossiping about and someone said, “well, let us all give our opinion of that who stayed with our tribe for such a long time!”
“He was a good man.” said one.
“By God, he was a brave man.”
“By God, he was a generous man.”
“By God, he looked after the animals well.”
“By God, he had some knowledge of men.”

The whole village praised him, and all the time the man was listening. There was pause, and then a young girl spoke, “but I know something about him that was bad!”
“What was it?” the people asked.
“He didn’t go far away enough from the huts when he urinated!” at this the whole village burst in to laughter, but the eavesdropper was so angry that he stood up said to them, “well, by God, I have moved far enough away now!” to the great astonishment of the whole village.

One day they were discussing the ill-behaviour of their wives and one of them said, “If we want them to behave well we must beat them up. Women are like children, beat them up and they will behave well.”

The other said, “No! if you beat your wife, she will become worse.” After arguing for a long time, they kept quiet and went home. On reaching his house, the man who was in favour of beating wives began to beat an ox-skin vigorously. 9. Read the story below and answer the questions that follow:-

THE CRUEL STEP-MOTHER

Once upon a time, there was a man and wife who had a baby girl. Unfortunately, the wife died and so, the man married again. He got another girl with the second wife. The two girls became extremely close; so close that whenever the mother sent one on an errand, the other was sure to accompany her. The mother, however, did not like the child of the deceased. She would always show her dislike by denying her certain favours. Her feelings became so bad that she decided to get rid of the girl.

To do this, she dug a hole in her bedroom on a day when the husband was absent and covered the hole with a cow’s hide. She then called her daughter and sent her to the house of a friend some kilometers away. As usual, the two girls wanted to go together but the woman refused, giving the excuse that she wanted to send the other one elsewhere. After the departure of her daughter, she tailed the other girl and sent her for her snuffbox in the bedroom. Unaware of what lay ahead, the girl eagerly rushed into the room only to fall into a hole! The mother very quickly filled the hole with soil, completely disregarding the girl’s screams for help.

When the daughter came back, she merely assumed that the absence of her dear companion was justified. After hours of waiting, she, however, became impatient and questioned the mother.

‘Where is my sister?’ she asked

“But she followed you. As soon as she did what I wanted, she ran after you. Now stop bothering me” the mother retorted.

Time passed and the now anxious girl went round calling out the name of the other one, but all in vain. Alas …she cried the whole night and the next day and refused to touch any food. The father helped in the search but to no avail.

After three days, the girl still cried and called the other one. She then heard a very weak voice responding in song:

Maalya Maalya
Maalya Maalya
Na mwenvu niwe mwai iiee malya
Ekwinza muthiko iiee malya
Wakwisa kunthika iiee malya
Maalya Maalya
(And your mother is the wise one iiee malya
She dug a grave iiee malya
The girl dashed towards the direction of the voice, repeated her cries and again got the same response. She came to the conclusion that whoever was responding was definitely underground somewhere in the house. Immediately the father came that day (before the arrival of the mother), she told him what had happened. After hearing the song, the father dug up the place and pulled out an extremely weak and disfigured daughter. All the three wailed and eventually, the father gave her a mixture of blood and milk from a goat to drink after which she vomited all the soil she had eaten. He gave her some more of the mixture after which he hid her.

When the wife eventually came back, the man did not let her get into the house but sent her for a cow in a far off place. He explained his action by telling her that he had decided to host a feast for relatives (including his in-laws). In the meantime, he sent-for all of them. When the woman came back with the cow, she found everyone waiting for her. Uneasy now, she sat down in the place she was shown by her husband. He then stood up and after welcoming all, reminded them of the lost daughter. He then called upon the wife to explain the circumstance leading to the sad episode. She hauntingly repeated the now commonly know story. When she sat down, the husband told this woman’s daughter to repeat her earlier wails after which all heard;

Maalya Maalya
Maalya Maalya
Na mwenvu niwe mwai iiee malya
Ekwinza muthiko iiee malya
Wakwisa kunthika iiee malya

All were surprised to hear the words of the other girl’s song and at that moment; the ‘dead’ girl joined them. The woman was as though paralyzed by shock. The husband then explained the truth of the matter and told his in-laws to take their daughter with them. They said that if that was what she had done to the girl, they couldn’t have such a monster in their house. The woman was disowned by all and chased away.

1. Read the passage below and then answer the questions that follow

WOMEN IN IRAN

So far, everything seems normal. But in the illustrations accompanying this description the ballerinas have been air-brushed out. Instead, an empty space, the floor and the blank wall meets the eye. Like so many other images of women in Iran the ballerinas have been censored

Dega’s painting is emblematic of a basic paradox of life in Iran, 20 years after the Islamic revolution. On the one hand, the regime has succeeded in completely repressing Iranian women. At any Government Institutions, Universities and Airports there are separate entrances for women, where they are often checked for signs of violating the strict dress code. They are forbidden to go out unless they are covered by clothing that conceals everything but their hands and faces. At one of the universities where I used to teach, I’m told a female professor was expelled because her wrist had shown from under her sleeve while she was writing on the blackboard.

Yet these measures, meant to render women invincible and powerless, are paradoxically making women visible and powerful. By attempting to control every aspect of women’s lives and by staking its legitimacy on the Iranian people’s supposed desire for this control____the regime has unwittingly handed women a powerful weapon; every private act or gesture in defiance of official rule is now a strong political statement.

Meanwhile, because its extreme regulation of women’s lives unnecessarily intrudes on the private lives of men, the regime has also alienated many men who initially supported the revolution

Women on the eve of the Islamic revolution were active in all areas of life in Iran. They were encouraged to participate in areas normally closed to them. Women were police officer, judges and pilots-active in every field except the clergy. By 1978, 22 women were members of parliament and two sat in the senate.

The Ayatollah Khomeini accused them of betraying culture and tradition. Dr. Farrokhrou Parsa was one of these accused traitors. She gave up her medical practice to become principal of the girls school I attended in Tehran. Then she became Iranians first female cabinet minister, in charge of education. When the Shah was ousted, Parsa was summarily tried and executed. She was charged with “corruption on earth, warring against God” and “Expansion of prostitution”, allowed no defense nowhere and sentenced by hooded judges; she was put in a sack before being killed.

Ayatollah Khomeini tried to expel women from the public sphere was not surprising. What was surprising was the leftist members of the revolutionary coalition who went away. The leftist had traditionally appeared to support women’s rights. However, their totalitarian mindset was ultimately more at ease with the rigid rule exposed by the reactionary deris with the pluralistic approach favoured by the women’s movement. Thus, when the Ayatollah began his crackdown, he had the full support of the leftists.

Many Iranian women, on the other hand were not so pliant. On a cold day in March 1979, thousands of shouting women massed Tuto one of the Tehran’s wide avenues. They had gathered to express their resistance to the Ayatollah’s attempt to make them invincible.

Some days earlier, the Ayatollah had annulled the family protection.

2. Read the passage below and then answer the questions that follow:-

The research by the Maendeleo ya Wanaume Organization that reports a case of reversed roles where men are made to cook, wash clothes, clean the house, utensils and baby sit should reveal more and delve into the causalities rather than issue inflammatory findings with alarming statistics that will only serve to scare courtship.

It should be noted with clarity that societal transition are normally treated with a lot of caution, sobriety and reasonableness to avoid endangering the very fabrics that hold the society together. This is because it’s a process that takes time to sink, be appreciated and acceptably embraced. Equally, the connotation reversed roles imply replacement of male domination by female domination instead of hybrid system where roles are shared equally and help handed out where necessary to supplement each other’s effort.

Gender refers to women’s and men’s socially defined roles and characteristics that are shaped by historical, economic, religious, cultural and ethical factors. Gender is learned through socialization, it is not fixed, it is changeable. Gender stereotypes therefore include comments like, women are weak and cowards, gentle, nurturing and caring while men are bread winners, decision makers and generally aggressive.

The African society and Kenya in particular is patriarchal. A social system based on male privilege and power in which women are regarded secondary and created for the service of men. Patriarchy is mostly for men and that’s why men feel threatened when patriarchy is challenged. However, research has shown that not all men are winners under patriarchy.
This is because patriarchy puts a lot of pressure on men to perform and become workaholic in a struggle to maintain the family, for example, research has shown most millionaires in the US are women, widows of men who died young from diseases related to over work.

Since gender is societal creation and not biology, it can be changed, albeit gradually. The stubborn men who live in the past should be prepared for feminism approach that perceives and interprets social situation from a woman’s point of view.

According to this approach, female oppression should be addressed adequately. Here, the area of focus includes: Education and legal rights for women. Economic rights, that advocate’s equal access to properties, jobs and career. The puzzle however, is where the approach leaves men, especially if the process is forceful.

Gender equity is an idea whose time has come as statistics indicate girls perform better than boys in schools and ladies are more preferable by employers than men due to hard work, honesty, loyalty and cost effectiveness.

Women must also rise to the occasion, take responsibility with caution and cease to be victims of inferiority complex. Change must not translate to arrogance and revengeful attitudes that will paint women as heartless. Life is meaningless without effective family institution. Let’s ensure our society does not fall apart.

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow:-

The river, the forest and the sky all drew Densu to the top of the hill with a power he had no need to fight against. He asked Nyaneba if there was no more work he could do on the farm up there. But at that time there was nothing really, and Nyaneba almost scolded him when he asked once more what was there to do.

"Densu," she said at the end of her patience, "the animal that does not rest gets so angry and unhappy that it spreads destruction wherever it goes. A human being works fully when there is work to do. A human being rests fully when the season for rest comes."

Densu did not importune Nyaneba about work any more. Almost everyday he climbed up the hill and sat on the warm rock looking at the river and the forest canopy. From where he sat, the river now looked thin and completely still. Seeing it at a distance, he had to think before it became in his mind a moving thing, not a dead, flat sheet shining passively in the sun.

So he knew the river’s motion in his mind, though his eyes perceived stillness. Once the motion was clear in his mind, it did not stop. It flowed in thought stream that could take him from the present all the way back to moments so far in the past his remembrance surprised him.

Some of the memories he would never understand. He had known a great happiness at a time about which he remembered nothing but the feeling itself. This remembrance took his feeling... back to a time when he was helpless but feared nothing because there was a presence around him that made him feel safe. He had told people about this feeling and always left them puzzled. They said he could have had such a time, because his father died before he was born, and his mother also died in childbirth. Yet the feeling was part of his memory, and it was so strong he knew it was true, in spite of what others saw and said. And often as he grew up, he found himself searching, sometimes in anguish, sometimes with sheer desire for a return of that time and of the feeling.

Yet life at times became an argument saying that presence, that wholeness he remembered so mysteriously and sought so naturally, would never be possible in the world outside the wishing mind. He had known people at Esuano, and begun to see life clearly, but most of the people and most of the life he saw led his mind far astray from the peace he sought.

This too he remembered: in his twelfth year something strange had happened. A white man had arrived at Esuano. He was not an official from the castle at cape coast, so people were astonished to see him there at all. They were more astonished when he told them he was a trader on the coast, but had grown tired of trading. He said he wanted to rest.

People shunned him. They were afraid of him and they had reason enough. He lived as if he and water had quarreled bitterly. He did not like food. His sustenance was drink and when he was really hungry he would look for fruit, like a child at play, and that would be his meal.

Densu went to him and sat watching him. He still went to him long after the other children had fled in fear. One day the stranger white man stopped singing his drunken songs, pointed to his heart and shouted something.

“Collins!” He repeated the name, stabbing his breast repeatedly with an extended finger.

When he stopped, Densu pointed to himself and said “Densu.” The white man roared happily. He seemed immensely pleased with himself that Densu had understood him, as if he had actually taught him to speak. He began a game of names, teaching Densu English words and learning Akan words from him.

In less than a month the game of words changed. It became even. Densu went to Collins whenever he had time. The idea of learning the strange language of the white excited him, and he worked hard to make free time for his new passion. Collins taught him willingly. He seemed to live for the hours when the eager boy came to talk to him.

But Collins stopped asking Densu the Akan names of things. With an eagerness answering the boy, he taught him as fast as he could absorb new knowledge, and his yellow-red face exploded with joy when Densu began at last to speak to him in his own language. The solitary white man then gave up all pretence of wishing to learn Akan. He was happy enough to have a person to talk to and teaching Densu to read and write gave him something to do when he was not drinking.

Densu asked him why he had left cape coast to come to Esuano. The white man’s answer was quite incomprehensible to him. All he understood was that the mention of cape coast made the white man violently angry. Once, later, Densu asked him why he did not go home. The drunken man wept tears at the questions. From then on Densu did not ask him any such questions again.

In his first months at Esuano the white man Collins sold a few things to the few who had any money. But after his third month at Esuano he sold nothing. 4. Read the following passage then answer all the questions that follow:

It is said that behind every successful man there’s a woman, so how can we help our sons succeed? By bringing them up in such a way that they understand their role as leaders, providers and protectors.

And how can we do this successfully? By noting their masculine qualities and praising them for these. Take note when they excel in masculine roles and encourage them. Admiration is the food of a man’s soul. Never belittle your son’s masculinity; it hurts very deeply and might result in deep resentment.

Are you faced with a rebellious son? Mind your language when you talk to them; you might be scolding him for doing or not doing something while inadvertently belittling his masculinity. Try the opposite for change; praise him and see how this transforms him. The untidy room will be a thing of the past, as will many other pains you have been wishing away. Relate the duties you assign him to his masculine qualities and he will be very glad to help.

When he is facing failure or a crisis, reassure him that you believe in him and his ability to pull through, no matter how difficult the situation might appear. Do not mock his ability to overcome a difficulty. Use statements such as “this might be the door to opportunity, a stepping stone to greater success.” who wouldn’t excel when someone who matters to them like a mum believes in them? A word of caution, though: we must be careful not to push our sons to become what they are not interested in being.

Allow them the freedom to make choices and let them learn from mistakes. There’s a greater temptation to be bossy towards our sons, but we need to refrain from giving detailed instructions on the what, when, how and where every action they take. Let him know when you disagree with his decision, but tell him he can still count on you.

For the women who have taken over leadership in the home, you need to let go and build your husband by encouraging him to take up that role. This will allow you time to be a mother you need to be, one who can nurture her sons and be a homemaker. Our sons need to learn from their fathers what it means to be a responsible man.

And to those women who are sacrificing their children’s well-being for careers I suggest, learn from Miss Taylor Caldwell, an Anglo-American writer with several awards to her credit once remarked: “I’d rather cook a meal for a man and bring his slippers and feel myself in the protection of his arms than have all the citations and awards I have received worldwide”

Soil erosion is a continual process in nature. Over the centuries weather and rocks interact to replace work out soil. Much as man renews his outer layer of skin. But the accelerated soil erosion created by man often destroys faster than nature can renew. It usually results from rapid and thoughtless exploitation, an attempt to obtain the maximum product as quickly as possible. This attitude has led to excessive cultivation, deforestation, overgrazing, failure to consider the nature of the soil and its environment and reluctance to devote labour and finance to maintaining its qualities. The results are seen in the barren lands of North Africa, the Middle East, and south china. And soil erosion has been a factor in the downfall of past civilizations. Perhaps the most frequently quoted example of soil erosion is that of the American dust bowl. Its natural equilibrium was upset by over cultivation and the land was reduced to near desert conditions. Wind erosion accelerated the process assisted by a succession of the dry years. There are many areas of the USA which have felt the impact of wind erosion. Others have been subject to water erosion on land which, through misuse has lost its fertility.

A number of measures which help to conserve soil have been in use for centuries in many parts of the world. Their primary aim is to make the best use of rain. They include terracing, contour farming and strip ploughing which control the quantity and pace of water run-off. Over the years, many of the best soils have been developed under grass. The soil itself must have a good biological content of minute organisms to circulate the nutrients and to maintain a health structure. With some crops, soil conservation is facilitated by allowing weeds to grow or by cultivating leguminous crops. These help to protect the soil from wind and water erosion and can be ploughed back as manure.

To restore vegetational cover to barren lands is a slow process, but the scientific and technical problems are far outweighed by those arising from man’s use of domestic animals, notably goats and sheep. These animals have caused soil erosion in many areas and it is urgently necessary to have more control over them. Goats and sheep have grazed large areas of Mediterranean countries into subsistence farming or deserts; they prevent tree growth and have reduced the average tree line by 1000 feet in four centuries. Unfortunately they and cattle are still being introduced into areas being cleared of forests in Africa. For example, the cattle of Maasai in Tanzania give rise to much erosion in their now restricted territories. In many instances, a far greater yield of protein could be obtained by ‘farming’ the wild animals in these territories. These animals and plants on which their life is based have achieved a harmony or balance in their relationship which, history, shows is rarely achieved between the goat, as farmed by humans, and its terrain.

6. Read the passage below and then answer the questions that follow:

   A situation whereby a large number of mentally and physically capable people of working age are willing to work but cannot find work is usually known as unemployment. In Africa, the unemployment rate is estimated to be 27-29%. This way beyond the usual acceptable rate of 4%. This is a grievous situation which has contributed to the soaring levels of poverty witnessed all around us.

   But what are the causes of unemployment? Can anything be done to ease the situation?

   First. Political upheavals have played a key role in promoting the skyrocketing levels of unemployment. Civil wars and ethnic clashes have led to bloodshed and massive loss of life. As is expected, foreign investors have fled for their safety. They have shut down their companies and relocated their businesses to places that are more conducive to the thriving of their enterprises. The results are usually jobless and consequently poverty.

   Ordinary citizens rarely ferment political trouble. Their “leaders” do it in an effort to upstage one another and make political and economic gains. Through their vote, citizens have the means of ensuring that such people do not accede to power.

   Contrary to expectation, international trade has not helped the situation for a long time. The developed countries, instead, have taken advantage of this trade to exploit Africans making them even poorer. Liberation of trade has meant that goods from all manner of places are allowed into the country. Most of these are cheaper than locally produced ones because the costs of production are lowered by efficiency factors and government subsidies. As a result local infant industries are unable to compete and end up collapsing. Once again many are left unemployed.

   In addressing this problem, the buck stops with African governments. It is upon them to create an enabling environment for local industries by way of improving infrastructure and security and also giving tax waivers. Sound policies that enhance efficiency in the sector should be instituted.

   In addition, the unemployment problem is worsened by a shortage of entrepreneurs. Many people lack the necessary skills, spirit of boldness and risk taking attitudes required in starting business ventures. Though they have the capital, they do not invest it locally. Thus they deny many people a chance for employment. Some prefer to stash their money in foreign accounts.

   A sense of patriotism is called for here. Nothing gives greater joy and satisfaction than knowing that one has contributed to the betterment of the lives of others, as they say east or west, home is the best, and so investing locally will have multiple benefits. African governments and NGO’s must also do more in equipping those interested with entrepreneurial skills.

   Moreover the African system of education has failed to change the white collar job mentality. Many are those who believe that these are more prestigious and better paying than blue collar jobs. This has meant that opportunities in the informal sectors go unexploited while there is excess unabsorbed labour in the white collar sector.
To solve this problem, People need to be socialized differently. The 8.4.4 system of education in Kenya is a step in this direction. One of its objectives is to equip its recipients with progressive attitude and skills necessary for self-reliance.

As we have seen, unemployment is a big problem in Africa; it is directly connected to the high poverty levels crippling many people. However, with concerted efforts, the situation can be alleviated.

7. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

All the interested parties in the education sector are impressed by the Kenya National Examination Council’s measures to ensure this year’s national examinations are free of cheating.

It is for this reason that the 276,224 Kenya Certificate of Secondary Education Examination (K.C.S.E) candidates have 4,834 examination centres manned by 4,886 supervisors who are assisted by 13,796 invigilators. All these are qualified teachers who have been recruited mainly for their integrity.

The centres are manned by 4,886 armed police officers who are ready for action should there be trouble. And as if this is not enough, there are 686 senior officers manning areas at stations where examination papers are kept.

Before they get into the examination rooms, the candidates and thoroughly searched. Bags containing question papers are opened by the supervisor in the presence of all candidates and thoroughly searched.

Any remaining question papers are sealed and kept in full view of the candidates during the particular paper’s entire duration.

At the time of sitting for the paper, candidates are under hawk-eyed invigilators. And at the end of the paper answer booklets are sealed as all candidates, invigilators and the head teacher witness. All these measures are commendable.

The KNEC deserves a pat on the back also due to the fast reaction Kenyans received from it whenever the media report leakages, which, in any case, turn out to be hoaxes. In fact, all doubting Thomases are beginning to have faith in the KNEC.

However, all these money-guzzling measures would be unnecessary if Kenyan students had been brought up in a morally upright environment.

Examination cheating shows how morally deprived our society has become. It is a sign that parents and teachers have failed in their duty of moulding the youngsters.

Kenyans must stop and think why the current generation believes in short cut to its desire and does not wish to sweat for it. As Kenyans, we should find out if our education system is catering for the students’ moral and ethical needs. Whenever things go wrong in education, interested parties are quick to point accusing fingers.

Teachers blame parents and the society and parents blame teachers. This dangerous buck-passing game should be stopped to save the youth who are foundation of the country’s future.
The responsibility of instilling moral and ethics rests squarely on education institutions. School play a crucial role as far as the transmission of value is concerned as once children start going to school; they spend more time with teachers than with any other person. This is why what teachers say is gospel to them, and not even parents can make them think otherwise.

A teacher can make a great contribution to the fostering of sound and religious values in children by taking interest in their behaviour.

You could win a car, a motorcycle, or a generous cash reward. But you have to score an ‘A’ in the Kenya Certificate of Secondary Education first.

As the cut throat competition for the best performance among schools intensifies, ingenious school administrators are coming up with all kinds of rewards to motivate their students to turn into top performers in the national examinations.

The top reward, a car, was promised to the top student at Nairobi school, while Alliance and Mang’u high schools promised to reward each ‘A’ grade student with shs.10,000.

But Kianjuri High school has a different reward altogether.

At the beginning of 2006, 14-year-old Francis Itote walked through the wrought iron gate of Kanjuri High school. Four years later, he rode out of the school on a brand new motorcycle.

Itote’s new ride was a gift from the school’s board of governors because he had given the school its first ‘A’ in the last five years.

The board had challenged last year’s candidates with an enticing offer; anyone who got an ‘A’ in KCSE would receive a motorcycle, with a one year comprehensive insurance cover and shs.5,000 cash prize. The motorcycle is valued at shs.70,000.

In a region where motorcycle taxis are valued by enterprising youth, the prize elicited immediate and intense competition among students.

As the motorcycle was officially handed over to 19-year-old Itote at a colourful ceremony on the school’s football field; students could not wait to dash back to class to study in a bid to claim the motorcycle next year.

“If I get one, I will go straight into the boda boda business,” said Max Muturi, a form four student.

All over Kenya, school boards as well as old boys and girls associations are willing to spend millions on incentives for students.

But education officials, including school principals, warn that these material rewards may not be the best way to prepare top students to face the challenges of everyday life after school.

“Motivating students by giving them money may not be sustainable in the long run,” says Patrick Nyagosia, a provincial director of education.
The official warns that once top students step into a world where money is scarce; their level of motivation might come crashing down.

Dr. Stephen Wahome, a clinical psychologist with psychological Health services, Nairobi, concurs. If not well handled, some of the incentives given by schools can easily end up doing more harm than good.

“Unless the reward had some relevance to the young learners’ mental and emotional status, it can easily disorientate them,” warns the psychologist.

Unquestionably a literary life is for the most part an unhappy life; because if you have genius, you must suffer the penalty of genius; and, if you have only talent, there are so many cares and worries incidental to the circumstances of men of letters as to make life exceedingly miserable. Besides the pangs of composition, and the continuous disappointment which a true artist feels at his inability to reveal himself, there is the ever-recurring difficulty of gaining the public ear. Your writers are buoyed up by the hope and the belief that they have only to throw that poem at the world’s feet to get back in return the laurel _crown: that they have only to push that novel into print to be acknowledged at once as a new light in literature. You can never convince a young author that the editors of magazines and the publishers of books are a practical body of men, who are by no means frantically anxious about placing the best literature before the public. Nay, that for the most part they are mere brokers, who conduct their business on the hardest lines of a profit and loss account. But supposing your book fairly launches, its perils are only beginning. You have to run the gauntlet of the critics. To a young author, again, this seems to be as terrible an ordeal as passing down the files of Sioux or Comanche Indians each one of whom is thirsting for your scalp. When you are a little older, you will find that criticism is not much more serious than the bye-play of clowns in a circus. When they beat around the ring the victim with bladders slung at the end of long poles. A time comes in the life of every author when he regards critics as comical rather than formidable, and goes his way unheeding. But there are sensitive souls that yield under the chastisement and, perhaps, are the saddest example of a find spirit hounded to death by savage criticism; because whatever his biographers may aver, that furious attack of Gifford and Terry undoubtedly expedited his death. But no doubt there are hundreds who suffer keenly hostile and unscrupulous criticism, and who have to bear that suffering in silence, because it is a cardinal principle in literature that the most unwise thing in the world for an author is to take public notice of criticism in the way of defending himself. Silence is the only safeguard, as it is the only dignified protest against insult and offence.

10. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow:

Ethnocentrism is a way of putting ourselves at the centre of everything and judging all others by our standards. It is a universal weakness and one that is at the root of most tribal and racial misunderstandings. While we consider ourselves superior and exalt our customs, we look down with scorn on those who behave differently from ourselves. They are lazy, unintelligent, immoral, un-enterprising, and materialistic. The more different these people are from us, the stronger our condemnation.

But this outlook raises a key question – what are the criteria for making these judgments? In each society, customs evolve to meet specific needs. It is when outsiders judge these customs against their own, particularly when they are very different, that they find them absurd, illogical or even downright savage.

Here in Kenya as many parts of Africa, old people are held in very high esteem. Custom demands respect for the old, and in some cases, superstition enforces it by threatening that if the old are treated badly, their ghosts will take revenge on those who were unkind to them. The old people therefore enjoy a great deal of respect; they are consulted in decision-making and they continue to head their households even when their sons are grown up. We find it inconceivable that the people could treat their old in any other way.

When we learn that some nomadic tribes in Australia and Brazil used to kill their old, we immediately label them as barbaric and uncivilized. And yet, for those people, it was a perfectly practical thing to do. They had to walk long distances in search of pasture, often with enemies in pursuit. The old were a burden and if captured would be tortured to death; it was kinder to kill them.

A further example of apparently strange behaviour is the treatment of old people in some modern European families. They put their old in homes for the aged, a practice which we may find cruel and selfish. Within the framework of these societies, however, this is quite acceptable. Many European houses are small, and domestic help is not readily available to care for the old. In an old people’s home, they will have more company and attention. None of those ways is superior to the others. They are all ways of coping with the problem of the old and as long as they do not create discord in the society, they are justifiable.

Variations abound in all forms of behaviour. What, for example is the standard form of greeting? For some of us, the American nod of the head and ‘Hi’ may appear too casual and impersonal. To the Americans, our elaborate handshaking and exchange of courtesies may appear too ritualistic and a waste of precious time. The Baganda women kneel in greeting. Those sensitive about equality of the sexes may find this behaviour objectionable. The French hug and kiss when they meet friends – some Africans may find this embarrassing.
The increased speed of travel has in a sense created a world community. There is even some validity in talking about the international man—one who can travel to any corner of the globe equipped with international language, dress and manners. But shall become sufficiently internationalized so that we are no longer ethnocentric or shall we always remain intolerant?

12. Read the following passage and answer the following that follow:

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

If you belong to a club, a college, a large company or some other institution, you will find that it has a set of rules. These govern the organizational structure of an institution, its composition, its powers and the rules which regulate its management. All persons who belong to the institution will have to abide by its rules. It is the same with the nations of the world. Each of them is governed by a set of rules, which is described in law as a constitution.

A constitution has been defined as ‘a document having a special legal sanctity which sets out the frame and framework and the principal functions of the organs of government of a state and declares the principles governing the operation of these organs.

Most modern constitutions are, in fact, contained in a formal document known as ‘the constitution.’ This constitution is described as a written constitution, because it is contained in a written law in the form of an Act of Parliament.

A written constitution is generally contrasted with an unwritten constitution. An unwritten constitution is not found in any formal document as such, but is contained in a number of sources. One example of an unwritten constitution is the British constitution. Its sources are found in statute law, case law, conventions of the constitution and even in certain textbooks.

A further contrast between constitutions is that some are rigid while others are flexible. A rigid constitution is one which can only be changed as the result of a long and cumbersome procedure. Such constitutions can only be by definition, written constitutions. For example, an amendment to the American constitution can only be effected by the approval of the president, a two-thirds majority in the House of Representatives and the senate, and the approval of the three-quarters of the Legislature of the Federal States. It is possible to delay or block such amendments in either the House of the Representatives or the senate. It does not follow though, that all written constitutions are rigid. It depends on the manner in which an amendment can be made. A flexible constitution is a constitution which can be amended with ease. All unwritten constitutions will generally be flexible.

The Kenya constitution can be altered by a Bill supported on the second and third readings by votes of not less than sixty five percent of all the members of the National Assembly. Such a Bill also requires the assent of the President. There is no question of any referendum and the ease with which the Kenya constitution has been amended since the original independence constitution of 1963, suggests that although the constitution is written, it is nevertheless a flexible one.

Another distinction can be drawn between Unitary and Federal constitutions where, under a unitary constitution, as is in Kenya, the Central Government retains the principal powers of state; there is no delegation of powers to the provinces. Under a federal constitution, the power of state are divided between the Central Government and the Federal States, as is the case in Nigeria.

The importance of the constitution in Kenya is made by the section 3 of the Act of Parliament. In here, the constitution is supported by the force of law throughout Kenya. If an other law is inconsistent with this constitution, the constitution shall prevail and the other law shall be void. This gives the High Court of Kenya power to declare any Act of parliament which is inconsistent with any part of the constitution to be unconstitutional and void. In addition, if the Executive (which includes both the administration and the members of the local and central government) acts in an unconstitutional manner, an aggrieved person can apply to the High Court for declaratory order. This order can claim the action in question is ultra vires. In addition, he can apply for an order of injunction to restrain the Executive from acting in the manner it proposes.

From what has been said above, it is clear that there is a division of powers between the three organs. The powers of government are traditionally divided into three main organs; the executive, the judiciary and the legislative. This division, in a way, is necessary. If the same person or body exercised all the three functions, then there could be tyranny and arbitrary government. It is, therefore desirable that the power of government should be vested in different persons or bodies, but a strict separation is still not possible or desirable. In Kenya, we have separation of powers but only to a certain extent.

The legislature, which makes laws, includes certain members of the Executive Ministers who are responsible for carrying out the laws. This link here, between the executive and the Legislature, is essential for the efficient administration of government services. For example, the rent tribunals exercise a quasi-judicial function by these tribunals is not usurpation of the powers of the Judiciary. It is only a recognition of the fact that there are certain functions which can be conveniently administered by other bodies.

Most of the 10 million Kenyans threatened with starvation are not where you thought they would be. They are not in the drought-stricken rural areas. They are instead, in the country’s urban centres, huddled in the informal settlements famously known as slums.

New official report lays bare the reasons for Kenyan’s hunger – and they go beyond rain failure. Drought is only one of the growing number of causes of hunger threatening nearly 10 million people in the country.

The Kenya Food Security Update- released early this week- says that the highest number of people who are likely to starve are low-income earners who live in urban informal settlements. According to the February 2009 Survey, 4.1million people in Nairobi and Mombasa slums are threatened with starvation because of reduced earnings resulting from the loss of employment after the elections violence.

Matters have been made a lot worse by rising food prices. In the slums, 37 percent – or nearly four in every 10- of the households reported having only one meal a day. And adults are required to be of good behaviour by restricting the food portion they consume. People are running into debt, moving elsewhere or selling whatever belongings they have to survive according to the survey.

Ironically, this population is receiving the least help from the government, aid workers and good Samaritans who are lining up to give donations, everywhere. “The unfortunate reality is that intervening organizations tend to respond to emergencies fairly quickly and have less enthusiasm for funding and implementing non-food interventions that are, at the minimum, mitigative in nature,” says the report. It is jointly published by the government, the World Food Programme, the United States Agency for International Development and the Famine Early Warning Systems Network.

As the global economic crisis bites and its effect are felt at home, it is unlikely that the rains – in whatever quantity – will alleviate the suffering of the urban hungry. The army of the manual workers, domestic and office support staff, security guards and idlers is hungry.

If they are not fed – and urgently, too – Kenyan’s urban middle class can expect a spike in larceny and other petty crimes, all to their detriment. Not to forget the public face of the famine, those affected by the extended drought season are only 2.5million – and they have among their number some 850,000 school-age children.

Another 1.9 million people are faced with starvation because they are affected by HIV and Aids – either directly or have lost a breadwinner to the condition. A shocking admission in the report is that there are 150,000 people displaced after the elections who are in transit camps close to their homes but cannot return or farm. This number receives food rations from the UN World Food Programme’s Emergency Operation.

Officially, the government claims that it has moved 255,000 people out of camps for the displaced. With 150,000 people displaced after the election depending on donor dole, the resettlement effort has only benefited 105,000 people. This number constitutes 16 percent of the revised total of 663,000 displaced people which is the official figure from the Ministry of Special Programmes.

Obviously, truth is something that makes the coalition Government extremely uncomfortable that it spends most of the time sugarcoating it.
14. Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow:

Maturity

One of the most tragic facts of human existence is that while, physical maturity for normal people develops naturally with the passage of time, mental maturity does not occur so easily. A large number of people who have the physique and age of adults, and are thus in possession of adult status and privileges, are not mentally mature. This is rather unfortunate, for, as Harry A. Overstreet in The Mature Mind observes, ‘The most dangerous members of our society are those grown-ups whose powers of influence are adult but whose motives and responses are infantile.” Adults who are incapable of carrying out their duties and obligations with a proper sense of responsibility cannot only give themselves unnecessary troubles, but also cause much harm to those over whom they have influence.

It is no doubt true that the mental growth of a person depends to some extent on the way his parents guided him when he was a child and on the environmental conditions he grew up in. However, mental development, unlike physical growth, need not stop with the end of puberty. A man is what he makes himself. He can, at any stage of his life, always develop himself further if he consciously makes the effort to do so. As Gautama Buddha put it, “The mind is everything; what you think, you become”.

If a man wants to reach an unknown destination, it is always best for him to study any appropriate map of the region. Similarly, for a man to develop his mental and intellectual powers, he should at the outset find out as he can what real maturity consists of. As Aristotle put it: “Those who wish to succeed must ask the right preliminary questions.”

Careful thinking and observation will enable one to see that a mature man is one with a keen sense of responsibility and a conscious awareness of what is proper. Thus he manages his affairs in accordance with explicit and reasonable criteria, the foundation of which he has examined critically and analytically. He upholds his convictions firmly because he is clear about why he upholds them.

Yet he is conscious of the value of postponed judgment in certain weighty matters. Aware as he is of the complexity of certain affairs, he knows that the different ways of dealing with them entail different consequences which may be of varying degrees of acceptability. He is aware that in such matters, different reasonable men will inevitably come up with different opinions. So while he respects the judgments of other people, and is co-operative, he makes his own study of the problems in proper perspective by looking at them objectively from all angles.
However the way a person makes an assessment depends a great deal on one’s knowledge. Thus, the mature person will never develop the unhealthy conception that what he already knows is all that need be known. In dealing with any problem he first finds out all he can, so that he will be as fair and as correct as possible. He makes the maximum use of opportunities to achieve the best for himself and everyone else.

In this general attitude, a mature man is always sympathetic but never sentimental. Like a scientist in the conduct of his professional duties, he sees the difference between objectives reality and what he and others desire, or hope to be the case. He knows his weaknesses but he has a well considered scales of values. Thus while he accepts himself as he is, and others as they are, he persistently tries to mould his character in the way he desires. He never tires of improving himself. It is this trait above all else which gains him the respect of other mature people, and what is more important, his own self-respect.

15. Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow:

HOW TO GROW OLD

In spite of the title, this article will really be on how not to grow old. My first advice would be to choose your ancestors carefully. Although both of my parents died young, I have done well in this respect as regards my other ancestors. My maternal grandfather, it is true, was cut off in the flower of his youth at the age of sixty-seven, but my other three grandparents all lived to be over eighty. Of remoter ancestors I can only discover one who did not live to a great age, and he died of a disease which is now rare, namely, having his head cut off. A great grandmother of mine lived to the age of ninety-two and to her last days remained a terror to all her descendants. My maternal grandmother, who had ten children, one of whom died in infancy, and many miscarriages, devoted herself to ten women’s, higher education as soon as she became a widow. She worked hard at opening the medical profession to women. She used to tell of how she met in Italy, an elderly gentleman who was looking very sad. She asked him why he was melancholy and he said that he had just parted from his two grandchildren. “Good gracious!” she exclaimed. I have seventy-two grandchildren and were sad each time I parted from one of them, I should have a miserable existence!” Speaking as one of the seventy-two, I prefer her recipe. After the age of eighty, she found she had some difficulty in getting to sleep, so she habitually spent the hours from midnight to 5 a.m reading popular science. I do not believe that she ever had time to notice that she was growing old. This, I think, is the proper recipe of remaining young. If you have wide and keen interests and activities in which you can still be effective, you will have no reason to think about the merely statistical fact of the number of years you have already lived, still less of the probable shortness of your future.

Psychologically, there are two dangers to be guarded against in old age. One of these is too great an absorption in the past. One should not live in memories, in regrets for the good old days, or in sadness about friends who are dead. One’s thoughts must be directed to the future and to the things about which there is something to be done. This is not always easy; one’s own past is gradually increasing weight. It is easy to think to oneself that one’s emotions used to be more vivid than they are and one’s mind more keen. If this is true, it should be forgotten and if it is forgotten, it will probably not be true.

The other thing to be avoided is clinging to youth in the hope of finding strength in its vitality. When your children are grown up they want to live their own lives, and if you continue to be as interested in them, as you were when they were young, you are likely to become a burden to them, unless they are unusually insensible. I do not mean that one should be without interest in them, but one’s interest should be contemplative and, if possible, philanthropic, but not too emotional. Animals become indifferent to their young as soon as they can look after themselves, but human beings, owing to the length of infancy, find this less easy.

I think that a successful old age is easiest for those who have strong impersonal interest leading to suitable activities. It is in this sphere that long experience is really fruitful, and that the wisdom born of experience can be used without becoming a burden. It is no use telling grown-up children not to make mistakes both because they will not believe you, and because mistakes are an essential part of education. But if you are one of those who are incapable of impersonal interest, you may find that your life will be empty unless you concern yourself with your children and grandchildren. In that case you must realize that while you can still help them in material ways, such as by making them an allowance or knitting them jumpers, you must not expect that they will enjoy your company.

Some of the old people are troubled by the fear of death. In the young there is a justification for this feeling. Young men who have reason to fear that they will be killed in battle may justifiably feel bitter in the thought that they have been cheated of the best things that life has to offer. Nevertheless, in old man who has known human joys and sorrows, and has done whatever work he could do, the fear of death is somewhat ignorable. The best way to overcome it-so at least it seems to me-is to make your interests gradually wider and more impersonal, until bit by bit the walls of the ego recede, and your life becomes increasingly part of the universal life. An individual human existence should be like a river-small at first and narrowly contained within its banks, then rushing passionately past rocks and over waterfalls. Gradually the river grows wider, the banks recede, the waters flow more quietly, and in the end, without any visible break, they become part of the sea, and painlessly lose their individual being. The man, who, in old age, can see his life in this way, will not suffer from the fear of death since the things he cares for will continue. Moreover, if, with the loss of vitality, weariness increases, the thought of rest will not be unwelcome. I should wish to die while still at work, knowing that others will carry on what I can no longer do, and content in the thought that what was possible has been done.

Ferret is a small mammal belonging to the Weasei family. Ferrets have long, slim bodies and short legs. There are two types of ferrets, Mustela faro, and the black-footed ferret, Mustela nigripes. Baby ferrets are called kits.

If frightened, these animals can discharge a strong smelling fluid from their scent glands under their tails.

The domestic ferret is often kept as a pet. It was originally bred in ancient times to hunt rats and rabbits, but today it is rarely used. It is a descendant of the European pole cat, which was once found throughout Europe. They vary in colour from nearly white to nearly black. However, most of them have creamy-coloured fur with dark hair tips, feet and tail and a ‘mask’ of dark fur around the eyes. Although many owners have the scent glands of their pet terrets removed, the animals still have a musky odour from other skin glands.

The black-footed ferret is native to Western North America. It resembles the domestic ferret, but is slightly darker. Their fur is dull yellow that is slightly darker on the backside. Their feet, tail tips are black, and have black fur around the eyes. The black-footed ferret is usually found on short grass in close association with prairie dogs, which constitute most of its diet. In addition to feeding on prairie dogs, the ferret spends most of its time underground in Prairie dog burrows, typically spending only a few minutes above the ground each day.

In burrows, it sleeps, catches its food, avoids predators and harsh weather, and gives birth to its young. It is secretive and primarily nocturnal. The ferret’s long slender body allows it to slip down burrows to find its prey while they sleep. This reduces the ferret’s risk of injury when attacking prey the same size as itself.

The black-footed ferret originally occurred in the Great plains from Alberta and Saskatchewan;’ Canada to Texasi Arizona, U.S.A. Classified as endangered, scientists once thought black-footed ferrets were extinct, until 1981, when a population of more than 125 black-footed ferrets were discovered in Wyoming.

Sadly, over the next several years, many of them died of distemper and this prompted the scientists who were now getting concerned that the whole population would die from the disease, thus the remaining animals were captured. Since then, scientists have been breeding the ferrets in captivity.

17. Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow:

How far is personality determined, or at least modified, by physical attributes of a person? Does the body determine the personality or does the personality in any way determine the physical make-up of the person? We are all apt, for example, to excuse a number of unpleasant qualities in a person on the grounds that he is the unhappy possessor of a gastric ulcer. A weakness of the physique, with the discomfort and pain ensuring, may distort the personality is singularly prone to gastric ulcers. We can also note that the personality of a man writes its signature on the lines of his face.

Probably there is an influence in both directions though there are few who would deny that much of a man’s personality depends on the makeup of the body he inherits. It is difficult, though not impossible, to have a dominating personality if one is a dwarf, and it is unlikely that a woman masculinised by some physical abnormality could achieve a maternal character.

In the poultry yard something markedly akin to personality is seen. A hen, in the absence of a cock, may take upon herself the dominance of the hen run, behaving in many ways with the arrogance and aggressiveness of a cock. These marked masculine attributes can be changed over to the meekest femininity on the reintroduction of the cock. A certain hen, after a year of normal henny characteristics, had become dominating and cocky in her relations with the rest of the hens, but in this instance, not only did the hen imitate the male in her protective care of the other hens but she grew cock feathers, comb and spurs. On investigation it was discovered that tuberculosis had destroyed her ovaries. Her psychology and her sex had changed as the result of a clinical mishap, a clear instance of personality being based upon physical make-up.

These instances of the influence of physical changes on the behaviour pattern of animals are given because much of our knowledge of the influence of the endocrine glands (the so-called glands of personality) has been obtained by experiments upon animals and only later confirmed by observations upon man, and second, because most biologists believe, and increasingly are driven to believe, that the whole realm of living things shows a strange unity of plan. Life, almost, is one and indivisible. This is not to say that there are not striking differences between, for example, man and the fly which transmits infection to him. None the less the pattern of the chemistry and physics of the living cell is fundamentally similar. Therefore in animals it is as easy to see the effects of physical endowment on personality as it is in human beings.

No one can doubt that physical endowment influences, perhaps even determines, personality. It is difficult to have a dominating personality if one is intensely ugly or is a tiny individual (as mentioned before), though it must be admitted, there are exceptions to this generalization. The tall are often shy and reiring; the short bumptious and self assertive. The artist personality often goes with a particular shape of hand, and so does the practical with another.

But how is physical endowment inherited? We have all known families whose members were more unlike each other, both in temperament and physique, than are unrelated people. An extraordinary case is that of unidentical twins one of whom was tall, blue-eyed and red-headed and other short, black-haired and brown-eyed. At first, and quite superficially, it might appear that inheritance plays little part in producing physical endowment, and yet we know that it does. It is known that hair colour, eye colour, albinism and a certain number of abnormalities such as colour-blindness, are inherited according to definite laws. As regards these inherited abnormalities we know that they must influence the personality. Imagine the effect of being colour blind. The person so afflicted can see little in the spring or autumn landscape to stir him; perhaps he cannot understand many of the passions of the poet and painter. And when an artistic temperament is inherited along with colour-blindness the effect on the personality must be almost tragic.
Therefore if personality is grounded in physical make-up, physical endowment becomes of prime importance, and the more we learn of its inheritance the better.

i) What effects may a gastric ulcer have on a person’s personality?
ii) The body affects the personality. Justify this statement using four examples the writer gives in relation to human beings.
iii) Why does the writer quote instances of physical changes affecting the behaviour pattern of animals?
iv) Does inheritance play any role in endowment? Illustrate your answer.
v) Why is it important to learn more about inheritance?
vi) Explain the meaning of the following words and phrases as they are used in the passage:

   - Writes its signature on the lines of his face
   - Bumptious
   - Masculinised
   - Clinical mishap
   - Akin

Broadly speaking, modern political democracy is a system of governance in which rulers are held accountable for their action in the public realm by citizens acting indirectly through the competition and co-operation of their elected representatives.

A regime is an ensemble of patterns that determines the methods of access of the principal public offices, the characteristics of the actors admitted to or excluded from such access, the strategies that the actors may use to gain access, and the rules that are followed in making publicly binding decisions.

Like all regimes, democracies depend on the presence of rulers, persons in authority roles who can give legitimate commands to others. What distinguishes democratic rulers from non-democratic ones are the ways in which the former come to power and the practices that hold them accountable for their actions.

Citizens are the most distinctive element in democracies. All regimes have rulers and a public realm, but only to the extent that they are democratic do they have citizens. Historically, severe restrictions on citizenship were imposed in most emerging or partial democracies based on age, gender, class, race, literacy, property ownership, tax-paying status, and the like. Only a small part of the population was eligible to vote or run for office. Only certain social categories were allowed to form, join or support political associations.

Today, the criteria for inclusion are fairly standard. All native-born adults are eligible, although age limits may be imposed on candidates for certain offices. Unlike like American and European democracies of the 19th century, none of the recent democracies in Southern Europe, Latin America, Asia, or Eastern Europe has even attempted to impose formal restrictions on the franchise.

Competition has not always been considered an essential condition of democracy. Classic democracies presumed decision-making based on direct participation leading to consensus. The assembled citizenry was expected to agree on a common course of action after listening to the alternatives and weighing their merits and demerits. A tradition of hostility to factions and particular interests persists in democratic thought, but it has become widely accepted that competition among factions is a necessary evil in democracies that operate on a more-than-local scale.

Yet while democrats may agree on the inevitability of factions, they tend to disagree about the best forms and rules for governing factional competition. Indeed, differences over... the preferred modes and boundaries of competition contribute most to distinguishing one subtype of democracy from another.

The most popular definition of democracy equates it with regular elections, fairly conducted and honestly counted. Some consider the mere fact of elections—even ones from which specific parties or candidates are excluded, or in which substantial portions of the population cannot freely participate— as a sufficient condition for democracy. This fallacy has been called electoralism, or faith that merely holding elections will channel political action into peaceful contests among elites and accord public legitimacy to the winners.

However, central to democracy, elections occur intermittently and allow citizens only to choose between the highly aggregated alternatives offered by political parties, which can, especially in the early stages of a democratic transition, proliferate in bewildering variety. Between elections, citizens can seek to influence public policy through interest associations, clientelistic arrangements, social movements, locality grouping, and similar intermediaries. Modern democracy, in other words, offers a variety of competitive processes and channels for expressing interests and values.

Another commonly accepted image of democracy identifies it with majority rule. Any governing body that makes decisions by combining the votes of more than half of those eligible and present is said to be democratic, whether that majority emerges within an electorate, a parliament, a committee, a city council, or party caucus. For exceptional purposes (for example, amending a constitution or expelling a member of the governing body). Qualified majorities of more than 50 percent may be required, but few would deny that democracy must involve some means of aggregating the equal preferences of individuals.

A problem arises, however, when numbers meet intensities. What happens when a properly assembled majority regularly makes decisions that harm some minority, especially a threatened cultural or ethnic group? In these circumstances, successful democracies tend to qualify the central principle of majority rule in order to protect minority rights. Such qualifications can take the form of constitutional provisions that place certain matters beyond the reach of majorities, requirements for concurrent majorities in several different constituencies, guarantees securing the autonomy of local or regional movements against the demands of the central authority, grand coalition governments that incorporate all parties, or the negotiation of social pacts between major social groups, such as business and labour. The most common way of protecting minority interests, however, lies in interest associations and social movements.

Another central feature of democracy is co-operation; actors must voluntarily make collective decisions binding on the polity as a whole. They must cooperate in order to compete. They must be capable of acting collectively, through parties, associations, and movements, to select candidates, articulate preferences, petition authorities, and influence policies.

But the freedoms of democracy should also encourage citizens to deliberate among themselves, to discover their common needs, and to resolve their differences without relying on some supreme central authority.

1. Read the extract below and answer the questions that follows:-

“Be careful, Waiyaki. You know the people look up to you. You are the symbol of the tribe, born again with all its purity. They adore you. They worship you. You do not know about the new oath. You have been too busy. But they are taking the new oath in your name, in the name of the teacher and the purity of the tribe. And remember Kabonyi hates you. He would kill you if he could. And he is the one who is doing all this. Why? The Kiama has power. Power. And your name is in it, giving it even greater power. Your name will be your ruin. Be careful.”

Kinuthia was very excited. His voice was full of concern and anxiety. Waiyaki laid his hand on Kinuthia
“It is alright, she would not marry me. And they would do nothing to me. There are young men there. I know them. They are loyal to Kabonyi. And they are sworn to keep the tribe pure and punish betrayal…….”
“I tell you, she would not marry me.”
“So it is true?”
“What?”
“That you’ll marry her?”
“Listen, Kinuthia. I tell you. She would not accept me.”

He went to see an elder a few weeks after this. The elder was a close associate of Kabonyi. The old man talked about Waiyaki’s own father and grandfather. He praised them for their bravery. He ended by saying that they never would have betrayed the tribe.

Waiyaki went home, his heart glowing with pride. His ancestors had done well. But at night it suddenly occurred to him that the old man hinted a warning to him. What made Waiyaki connect his warning and Kinuthia’s information? Yet the more he thought about it, the more it all seemed to become clear.

Christmas was approaching. This season of the year coincided with the coming tribal ceremonies and rituals. Waiyaki did not take part in them as much as he used to do. His work was becoming almost more than he could manage. Many teachers from all over the ridge came to see him and many elders and children came to him with various problems. But in spite of all these, Waiyaki was losing that contact with the people that can only come through taking part together in ritual. He was becoming too obsessed with the schools and the widening rift and divisions.

Then it happened. It was a thing that scared everyone. Such a thing had never happened before. A hut that belonged to one of Joshua’s newest followers was burnt. Nobody was hurt but everything that was in the hut was destroyed. Waiyaki could not tell why, but he connected the incident with the Kiama. Was Kabonyi determined to destroy all that stood against him and the tribe?

The realization came to him as a shock. He instantly thought that he should not have resigned from the Kiama. Its power and influence was there, everywhere.

a) What was Kinuthia warning Waiyaki against?
b) Which oath is being referred to?
c) Your name will be your ruin! Comment on this statement
d) In about 60 words, summarize why Kinuthia feels Waiyaki should be careful
e) What warning did the old man hint to Waiyaki
f) Discuss any one theme employed in the extract
g) Identify one character trait of Kinuthia as seen in the extract
h) What does Waiyaki feel about having resigned from the Kiama?
Why does Waiyaki seem to be loosing contact with people?

Give the meaning of the following words as used in the passage.

i) associate

ii) rift

In view of what happens later in the novel, does Waiyaki’s name become his ruin?

2. THE RIVER BETWEEN by ‘Ngugi Wa Thiong’o’

Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow:

A big roar of “The Teacher” greeted his brief speech. Some cried “The Teacher is right,” though they did not know what he was right about. Others cried, “Let Kabonyi come forward”. And Kabonyi stood up with dignity. Their unfinished battle was now on.

He was once a follower of Joshua. Now he was the leader of the Kiama and he lived in Makuyu. He spoke with the authority of a man who knows the secret workings, evil and good, in men’s hearts and in the country. His big accusation was that Waiyaki was unclean. He had thahu and if he continued teaching the people there would be darkness instead of light. When a girl called Muthoni died because she was visited by evil spirits, Waiyaki had taken her to the white man’s hospital in Siriana, and was never cleansed. As he was a leader, his thahu had visited the tribe. It was now for the tribe to take action. For Waiyaki was a greater menace than the people realized. He was in league with the white man, who had brought a secret religion to quieten the people while the land was being grabbed by their brothers. And taxation? Who did not now complain of the heavy taxation imposed on the men and women? He described Waiyaki’s many secret journeys to Siriana under the pretext of getting more teachers for the people. When the Kiama said that people should take arms against the Government Post (it was very small anyway, it would not be difficult to take it) Waiyaki opposed this and cried: “Education! Education!” Will education give us back our land? Let him answer that.

He sat down. Waiyaki noticed that Kabonyi had carefully avoided any mention of Joshua or Nyambura. Why? He thought that he too would avoid dragging in the name of Nyambura but he would speak of unity. Now, or he would never get another chance. Kabonyi’s speech had been greeted first with stony silence and then with murmuring. The sun was slowly going down.

Waiyaki’s voice was calm and compelling. His eyes shone and anger began to stir in him, for now he knew without any doubt that Kabonyi was determined to see his ruin.

“What does Kabonyi want?” he asked. “Who first followed the white man and embraced the new faith? Who betrayed the tribe when Makuyu and Kameno and the other ridges could have risen in arms against the white man?”

He turned to the people and in simple words reminded them of their history. “It was before Agu and Agu, at the beginning of things, that Murungu, the Creator, gave rise to Gikuyu and Mumbi, father and mother of the tribe. He made them stand on the holy ground on top of Kerinyaga and showed them all the land. You remember what he told them; the great promise that he gave to our ancestors. ‘This land I give to you, O man and woman. It is yours to till, you and your posterity.’ The land was fertile and in it grew all, the fruit and honey was there in plenty. When he brought them to Kameno, they still saw the land was beautiful. They were happy and with content in their hearts followed Murungu to Mukurwe wa Gathanga, where he kept them. And now we who are descendants of the nine daughters of Gikuyu and Mumbi are torn with strife and rivalry.”

He spoke of the great heroes of the tribe and mentioned Demi na Mathathi, Wachiori, Mugo wa Kibiro and Kamiri. He told them of the great victories that these heroes had over other peoples whom they had fought with.

(a) What had Waiyaki just said that caused the roar?

You remember what he told them; the great problem that he gave the ancestors...........

(d) Make notes on the accusations Kabonyi levels against Waiyaki

(g) What is ironical about Kabonyi’s accusation against Waiyaki?

(h) Illustrate the use of flashback in the extract

(i) Who were Demi na Mathathi and why was Waiyaki previously told he could not play Domi

“Why does the Kiama want me?” Waiyaki asked again as soon as they had stepped out.

“Oh, I don’t know exactly,” Kamau answered vaguely, yet with a note of finality that invited no more questions. Waiyaki’s mind was behind with his mother. Then he remembered the frightening images that had passed through his mind while he had lain awake in bed. He looked around in the darkness and felt a terror of nothing visible pursued him.

“It is a dark night,” he commented.

“It is dark,” Kamau agreed. These two never held a long conversation, not unless there was third person. Kinuthia had always been the third person. Kamau saw in Waiyaki the hawk that always snatched his piece of meat when he himself was about to eat it. How would he ever rise or succeed as long as Waiyaki was in the way? He came to hate him. The hatred had grown slowly, gathering violence as the years dragged along. And yet Kamau felt more and more powerless to fight against Waiyaki. He could never quite rouse himself to the effort.

The lone hut to which they went was a distance from Kabonyi’s group of mud huts. The outside was dimly lit by a small lantern that was put on a stone near the fireplace. In the fireplace were glowing pieces of wood which gave oppressive warmth to the hut. Waiyaki was aware of figures lurking in the edges of darkness and he took them for the elders.

“Is it well with you all?”

“It is well.”

There was not the same warmth of response and they did not call him the teacher, a title which was now his name. He sat on a stool and wondered what was coming.

It was Kabonyi who first spoke. He was old, very old, yet his eyes had that glitter in them that made you think they were only live things in him. But he had energy and you could detect this in his voice. He spoke about the ridges, the initiation ceremonies that were under preparation. Now this ancient custom was about to be ruined by certain impurities in the land. The disease in the ridges had started with Joshua. The death of Muthoni had been the first contamination.

“But that is not our fear. The trouble now comes because the impurity in Joshua has caught some in our midst. It is the hidden soul in your body that kills you.”

Here he looked at Waiyaki meaningfully. Numbness came over the Teacher as he heard Kabonyi speak. He did not know where the talk was leading, but he could guess. He remembered Kinuthia’s warning, the elder’s hints and his own mother’s questions. Waiyaki thought: “And all this while I have busied myself with the education of their children.” Something like bitterness began to eat into him. To hear Kabonyi speak in that voice you would never think that he had once been one of Joshua’s followers.

“Yes,” Kabonyi repeated slowly. There was a strange stillness in the hut. It was a stillness such as precedes a storm or an explosion. “It is bad when he who has taken himself to be the leader of the people is touched by the impurity, for he is still in a position to spread the thahu to those close to him, to the stem and roots of the tribe. Such a person is a danger and he needs cleansing.
Again Kabonyi paused, and his eyes rolled all round the hut, finally resting on Waiyaki. You could not tell if there was malice or scorn in that look. He spoke in an even voice and his words were measured.

“You, our teacher, no doubt remember that girl, what was her name?”

“Which girl?” Waiyaki forced him to ask. “I am in the dark.”

“Joshua’s daughter. Her name? Yes. Muthoni. She was not clean. Yet you took her to the hospital. You touched a dying woman, a dead body. And were you ever cleansed? I do not think so. But you ought to have been. You are not ignorant and you know what this means to the tribe.” Waiyaki was going to speak, but Kabonyi waved him into silence.

4. Read the following excerpt and then answer the questions that follow:-

The idea that she had actually run away, actually rebelled against authority, somehow shocked him. He himself would not have dared to disobey Chege. At least he could not see himself doing so.

So tonight Waiyaki knew that Muthoni had actually run away. Her aunt, living in Kameno, was going to take charge of her. In some villages people could not believe this. They said that Joshua had a hand in it, probably to appease the angry gods of the outraged hills. Was it not known that Joshua took beer secretly? Strangely, nobody had ever seen him drinking. But they said they knew.

The dance was being held at an open-air place in Kameno. Whistles, horns, broken tins and anything else that was handy were taken and beaten to the rhythm of the song and dance. Everybody went into a frenzy of excitement. Old and young, women and children, all were there losing themselves in the magic of the motion of the dance. Men shrieked and shouted and jumped into the air as they went round in a circle. For them, this was the moment. This was the time. Women, stripped to the waist, with their thin breasts flapping on their chests, went round and round the big fire, swinging their hips and contorting their bodies in all sorts of provocative ways, but always keeping the rhythm.

They were free. Age and youth had become reconciled for this one night. And you could sing about anything and talk of the hidden parts of men and women without feeling that you had violated the otherwise strong social code that governed people’s relationships, especially the relationship between young and old, man and woman.

Waiyaki still felt uneasy. Something inside him prevented him from losing himself in this frenzy. Was it because of Muthoni? He wondered what Livingstone would say now if he found him or if he saw the chaos created by locked emotions let loose. And the words spoken! Even Waiyaki was slightly embarrassed by this talk of forbidden things. Perhaps this was so because the mention of forbidden things at any other time was a social taboo. Of course Waiyaki knew that nothing bad would happen in spite of the talk. It was actually a taboo to go with a woman on such an occasion.

a) Why did Muthoni rebel against her father?
b) What made Waiyaki feel embarrassed by the talk of forbidden things?
c) Describe the character of Muthoni and Waiyaki as portrayed in the excerpt.

5. LITERARY PASSAGE.-The River between by Ngugi wa Thion’o

A pleasurable numbness dulled Waiyaki into immobility. He did not move but leaned against a tree and watched the apparition. The girl was on the opposite bank, in a flat clearing hidden a little by small bushes. Waiyaki could not tell why the place reminded him so much of the sacred groove where long ago his father had taken and revealed the ancient prophecy. This place she was in was sacred too. Nyambura seemed to be beckoning over something. And Waiyaki watched, held by the desire to posses her. He moved a little. He could now see her clearly. She was kneeling down in a praying posture. He was fascinated. A kind of holy light seemed to emanate from her body. The place would forever remain sacred to him. Few yards away from here was a place where he had sat long ago when being circumcised. It was a place where he had shed blood, as if it was needed to propitiate angry spirits. When Waiyaki realized she was praying he was moved. It was very strange as he watched he experienced a frightening sensation, as if she and he were together standing on an altar ready for a sacrifice.

A grave atmosphere seemed to be enveloping the whole area and Waiyaki wanted to go away. He would not see her. No. Not now. All he wanted was to run away from this, for he could not face it. He was confronted with a might, a presence far beyond him. And he now felt her beyond him, on the other side. He made as if to move away, unseen. But the dry crack of a broken twig betrayed him. She raised her head and saw him. Waiyaki stood and looked at her. Nyambura still knelt. Their eyes met and they didn’t utter a word. Nyambura was afraid of the intense excitement that possessed her. Then Waiyaki made as if to move again, now feeling afraid of her, as if the intense glare in her eyes would destroy him. He wanted to shake off that power she now exercises over him on this altar of sacrifice. But her excitement was growing to a breaking point and she spoke to him, forcing herself to be calm. A note of defiance and challenge was discernible in the voice. And Waiyaki saw that she had been crying.

“Don’t run away, teacher,” she said.

A pleasant shock went through Waiyaki and made his body hot with desire. She had actually called him “Teacher”, a name no follower of Joshua would call him. Was there a mocking laughter in the voice? He could not tell. He waited for her patiently.

“Where are you going?” she asked him when she had crossed the river. Waiyaki felt confused. The question wrung the truth out of him. He could not go round and sit in a place where he could watch the meeting at a distance in the hope of seeing her.

“I was just walking. I like the river, the bush and the trees.”

“I am going to the meeting.”
“I thought you would already be there. It was a surprise to see you.”
“I just wanted to pass through here.” A pause. Then she laughed, a little nervously. “You see, I also like the river, the bush and the trees. That is my favourite spot.”
“Do you often come here?”
“Sometimes I do. Not very often.” Waiyaki was quiet. Another silence fell between them. His whole body was on fire. “My sister was initiated there,” she said abruptly. She made him feel guilty.
“You still remember her.”
“How can I forget her? I loved her.”
“Were you only two in your family?”
“Yes, now I am alone.”
“I am also alone in my family. All my sisters are married. The youngest, whom I loved most, died a long time ago. I was then young.”
Nyambura felt pleased because of this exchange of confidence. Waiyaki did not know what else to say.
“You will be late for the meeting.”
She did not move. Then quietly, as if speaking to herself, she said, “she was brave. Do you remember her?”
“I do, always.”
“Her last words.”
“Yes…..”

   “Mugo was born and grew up in Kameno before he went to tell people what he saw. For he saw many butterflies, of many colours, fly about over the land, disrupting the peace and the ordered life of the country. Then he cried aloud and said: ‘there shall come a people with clothes like butterflies…’ people didn’t believe him. Some even poured scorn on him, laughing at him, for they said: ‘he is not well.’ and they would not listen to his voice, which warned them: ‘beware!’ The seer was rejected by people of the ridges. They gave him no clothes and no food. He became bitter and hid himself refusing to tell them more. He went beyond the hills, to the world yonder, the whole extent of Gikuyu land. He was not yet exhausted and there spoke the message even louder. Still they laughed and poured scorn on him. Here they thought him dead. But disguised he came back here and settled.”

Chege paused for a while as if to gather his breath. His eyes shone as if with inner power and then slowly he said:

“We are his offspring. His blood flows in your veins.” Waiyaki stood as if dumb. The knowledge that he had in him, the blood of this famous seer, who had been able to see the future, filled him with an acute sense of wonder. He could not speak; the only word which escaped him was, “Ha!” his father was still speaking:

“He died here. Our fathers do not know where his grave is. But some say that he was carried up by Murungu.”

Chege stopped and slowly turned to Waiyaki. Waiyaki trembled freely.

“I see you fear. You must learn to fight fear…fear…It was not only Mugo whom they rejected. When I told them about Siriana, they would not listen.”

For the first time, Waiyaki felt really frightened. Unknown terror gripped him. He fought with it.

“No doubt you wonder why I tell you all this…”

Waiyaki wanted to cry out: “don’t tell me more. I don’t want to hear more. No! No! No! Father!” instead he only whispered

“Yes!”

“You are the last in our line.”

Waiyaki felt as if a heavy cloud was pressing down on his soul and he felt a strange sensation of suspension in his stomach. It was as if something, a presentiment, was moving toward him with all speed and he was powerless to prevent it.

“Sit down.” his father spoke gently.

Waiyaki’s legs had begun to lose strength and sank onto the grass.

“You are tired,” Chege said as he moved near his son.

Waiyaki stopped trembling and hated himself for showing fear. Chege repeated slowly.

“You see, when Mugo became bitter he refused to tell them more.” Chege made another pause .His face and eyes were set as if he was trying to recall something long-forgotten. He was now standing just behind Waiyaki. He bent down and touched his son on the shoulder. Waiyaki realized that his father’s hand was trembling slightly. Chege withdrew his hand quickly and then with a loud tremor. In his voice went on:

“Now, listen my son. Listen carefully; for this is the ancient prophecy…I could not do more. When the Whiteman come and fixed himself in Siriana. I warned all the people. But they laughed at me. May be I was hasty; perhaps I was not the one. Mugo often said you could not cut the butterflies with a panga. You could not spear them until you learn and know their ways of movement. Then you could trap, you could fight back. Before he died, he whispered to his son the prophecy, the ancient prophecy: ‘Salvation shall come from the hills. From the blood that flows in me, I say from the same tree, a son shall rise and his duty shall be to lead and save the people!’ he said no more. Few knew the prophecy. Perhaps Kabonyi, who has betrayed the tribe, knows about it. I am old, my time is gone. Remember that you are the last in this line.

“Arise. Heed the prophecy. Go to the mission place. Learn all the wisdom and all the secrets of the white man. But do not follow his vices. Be true to your people and the ancient rites.”

“Father…” Waiyaki called out when he had recovered from the shock. He felt weak and small; he did not know what he wanted to say.

“You go there. I tell you again, learn all the wisdom of the white man. And keep on remembering, salvation shall come from the hills. A man must rise and save the people in their hour of need. He shall show them the way; he shall lead them.”

“But…but…they don’t know me, I am a child and they rejected Mugo…”

“Let them do what they like. A time will come-I can see it coming-when they shall cry for a saviour…”

7. Read the extract below and answer the questions that follow:—

When Waiyaki began to speak again he felt happy. This was the moment to push his plans through. He spoke quietly; clearly, the elation of speaking to a large crowd making him feel light. He briefly outlined his plans for Marioshion. The roof needed tin; the children needed desks, pencils, papers and then many more schools had to be built. More teachers had to be employed. He sat down, fearing that he had not made his point clear. But the applause that greeted him left him with no doubt about the reception of the short speech.

A moment too soon Kabonyi was on his feet. He did not smile but looked defiantly around him. The battle was on. He was old but his voice was good and steady. Besides he knew his audience well and knew what to appeal to. He could speak in proverbs and riddles, and nothing could appeal more to the elders, who still appreciated a subtle proverb and witty riddles. Kabonyi again knew his limits. He did not want to bring too many issues together. So he decided to leave the Joshua affair and come to it later as a final blow.

He reminded them of the poverty of the land. The dry month had left the people with nothing to eat and the expected harvest would not yield much. He touched on the land taken by the white man. He talked of the new taxes being imposed on the people by the Government Post now in the midst. And instead of Waiyaki leading people against these more immediate ills, he was talking of more buildings. Were people going to be burdened with more buildings? With more teachers? And was the white man’s education really necessary? Surely there was no way out.

It was better to drive away the white man from the hills altogether. Were the people afraid? Were there no warriors left in the tribe? He, Kabonyi, would lead them. That was why he had formed the new Kiama. He would rid the country of the influence of the white man. He would restore the purity of the tribe and its wisdom.

“Or do you think the education of our tribe, the education and wisdom which you all received, is in any way below that of the white man?” He challenged the people, appealing to their pride, to the manhood in them and to their loyalty to the soil. “Do not be led by a youth. Did the tail ever lead the head, the child the father or the cubs the lion?”

A few people applauded. And then there was silence. (Kabonyi too had stirred something in their hearts). Soon they began to talk. Some saw a lot of truth in what Kabonyi had said. They knew they were not cowards. And surely it was easier to drive away the white man and return to the old ways! But others, especially the young people, were on Waiyaki’s side. Waiyaki himself was hurt. Kabonyi had touched on sore spot, the question of youth. When Waiyaki stood up again the old defiance came back. The courage that had made him famous among the boys of his riika was now with him. At first he just looked at the people and held the voice of his father.

No – it was like the voice of the great Gikuyus of old. Here again was the saviour, the one whose words touched the souls of the people listened and their hearts moved with the vibration of his voice. And he, like a shepherd speaking to his flock, avoided words that might be insulting. In any case, how could he repudiate Kabonyi’s argument? Waiyaki told them that he was their son.

They all were parents. He did not want to lead. The elders were there to guide and lead the youth.

And the youth had to listen. All he wanted was to serve the ridges, to serve the hills. Unless the people heeded his words and plans, the ridges would lose their former dignity and would be left a distance behind the country beyond ……..

8. Read the excerpt below and answer the questions that follow:-

   The moon was also awake. Her glare was hard and looked brittle. The whole ridge and everything wore a brilliant white. And the little things that in the day appeared ordinary seemed now to be changed into an unearthliness that was both alluring and frightening. Waiyaki listened for voices in the ridge but he could only hear silence. As he moved across the ridge through small bushes and trees, the silence and the moon’s glare seemed to have combined into one mighty force that breathed and had life. Waiyaki wanted to feel at one with the whole creation, with the spirits of his sister and father. He hesitated. Then the oppression in him grew and desire to talk with someone mounted. The brightness of the moon seemed now soft and tangible and he yielded to the magic. And Waiyaki thrust out his arms and wanted to hold the moon close to his breast because he was sure she was listening and he wanted her cold breath near him. Now his muscles and everything about his body seemed to vibrate with tautness.

   Again he was restless and the yearning came back to him. It filled him and shook his whole being so that he felt something in him would burst. Yearning. Yearning. Was life all a yearning and no satisfaction? Was one to live a strange hollowness pursuing one like a malignant beast that would not let one rest? Waiyaki could not know. Perhaps nobody could ever know. You just had to be. Waiyaki was made to serve the tribe, living day by day with no thoughts of self but always of others. He had now for many seasons been trying to drain himself dry, for the people. Yet this thing still pursued him.
Suddenly he thought he knew what he wanted. Freedom. He wanted to run, run hard, run everywhere or hover aimlessly, wandering everywhere like a spirit. Then he would have everything—every flower, every tree—or he would fly to the moon. This seemed possible and Waiyaki raised his eyes to the sky. His heart bled for her. But he could not run. And he could not fly.

All this while, Waiyaki had been moving. Soon he was down at Honia river. The crickets went on with their incessant shrilling. The quiet throb of the river echoed in his heart. He felt comforted. The water looked strange under the moon. He crossed the river and started climbing up the slope, following the cattle road that would take him to Joshua’s village—Makuyu. He would go to see Kamau. It was strange how Kamau and Kinuthia’s lives seemed to be running on the same road, always affected by the same events. When young, they used to take their herd grazing together.

At Siriana, they were together. It was only after Waiyaki’s circumcision that they separated for a time. Kamau was initiated a few months after the break away. And now they were together at Marioshoni. For a time, Waiyaki became rapt in thoughts, about Kamau, Kinuthia and their life at school.

Read the passage below and then answer the questions that follow:

Just then, another boy came running from a group of cows a distance away.

“Stop fighting!” he shouted breathlessly as he stood near the pair. Kamau stopped, but he still sat on Kinuthia. “Why are you fighting?”

“He called me names,” answered Kamau

“He is a liar. He laughed at me because my father died poor and …..”

“He is !”

“You beggar.”

“You……….. you…………”

Kamau became furious. He began to pinch Kinuthia. Kinuthia looked appealingly to the other boy. “Please stop this, Kamau. Didn’t we swear that we of the hills were comrades?”

He felt helpless. It was the day earlier that they had sworn to be brothers.

“What do I care about comrades who insult my father?” asked Kamau.

“I will do it again,” retorted Kinuthia between tears. “Do now.”

“I will.”

“Try!”

Kamau and Kinuthia began to struggle. The boy felt an irresistible urge to fall on Kamau; he pulled a blade of grass and began to chew it quickly, his eyes dilating with rage and fear.

“Kamau,” he burst out

The tremor in the boy’s voice sent a quiver of fear up Kamau. He quickly looked up and met the burnt eyes, grazing at him. Meekly he obeyed the unspoken command. But his face went a shade darker than normally was. He slunk away, feeling humiliated and hating himself for submitting. Kinuthia stood unsteadily and looked gratefully at the boy. The boy kept on lowering his face, gazing at the same spot feeling of pride and triumph he had suddenly subsided to one of regret at having done that to him. Perhaps it might have felt better if Kamau had stuck it out and he had to use to remove him.

And he could not fly.

All this while, Waiyaki had been moving. Soon he was at Honia river. The crickets went on with their incessant shrilling. The quiet throb of the river echoed in his heart. He felt comforted. The water looked strange under the moon. He crossed the river and began climbing up the slope, following the cattle road that would take him to Joshua’s village – Makuyu. He would go and see Kamau. It was strange how his life and Kamau’s and Kinuthia’s seemed to be running on the same road.

12. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow:

“A man shall rise and save the people in their hour of need.” Was he that saviour? Was he the promised one or had Chege’s mind been roving? How would he save them? Chege had placed a burden on his shoulders, a burden hard to carry. A saviour did something big, something that had power to change the lives of the people. A saviour did something startling, a thing that happened so suddenly one night that nobody could resist its power. What had he himself done?

But now he wanted an opportunity to shout what was oppressing his mind. He would tell the people: “unite.” That would be early next year. For a moment he dreamt the dream. It was a momentary vision that flashed across his mind and seemed to light the dark corners of his soul. It was the vision of a people who could trust one another, who would sit side by side, singing the song of love which harmonized with music from the birds, and all their hearts would beat to the rhythm of the throbbing river. The children would play there, jumping from the rocks to rocks, splashing water which reached fathers and mothers sitting in the shade around, talking, watching. Birds sang as they hovered from tree to tree, while farther out in the forest beasts on the land circled around...In the midst of this Nyambura would stand. The children would come to her and she would talk to the elders. The birds too seemed to listen and even the beasts stopped moving and stood still. And a song rose stirring the heart of all, and their longing for a new life in the future was reflected in the dark eyes of Nyambura.

He stretched his hands and wanted to touch her trembling figure as she led them into this song. And then he saw that the hands of the other people, including Joshua, were stretched towards her. For a moment he stood still, fascinated by the sight. And then horror caught him. They were all pulling her into pieces, as if she were a thing of sacrifice to the god of the river, which still flowed with life as they committed this outrage on her. And he too had joined the crowd and he was tearing her to himself and she did not cry out because she was dumb. Then he saw that it was Muthoni, and she was thrown into the river and she was saying, “I am a woman now.” The river carried her with it into a darkness which no one could fathom. Waiyaki’s heart cried and he knew that she was not there. She had gone. And everyone turned away, not speaking to one another because they felt guilty. They averted their eyes from Waiyaki, the Teacher as they passed him. At last he as left alone. He did not know whether he should follow Muthoni or the crowd. Nyambura now stood in front of him. A flash of joy drove the guilt away and he went forward to touch her. She would not let him. And Waiyaki wanted to remonstrate with her and remind her that one tie when she had allowed him to hold her in his arms. But he remembered that Nyambura had not agreed to marry him. Why did she refuse? Because she would not disobey a father? Yes. That was the word obedience. And because she was obedient he had lost her. Forever. and his yearning would go on, on, till he died. Death was the end of everything. He was about to open his mouth and tell her that Joshua had led the crowd in tearing her to pieces. Then Waiyaki remembered that he too had chosen the crowd, had acceded to the ritual demands of the tribe and had shed her blood. Guilt weighed on him. The darkness terrified him. He wanted to scream in horror of himself. He had failed to tell people to unite. Another time. A next time. And he woke up still panting, next time.

13. Read the comprehension below and answer the questions that follow
   (25mks)

   “Mugo was born and grew up in Kameno before he went to tell people what he saw. For he saw many butterflies, of many colours, flying about over the land disrupting the peace and the ordered life of the country. Then he cried aloud and said: “There shall come a people with clothes like butterflies....” People did not believe him. Some even poured scorn on him, laughing at him, for they said: ‘He is not well.’ And they would not listen to his voice, which warned them: ‘Beware!’ the seer was rejected by the people of the ridges. They gave him no clothes and no food. He became bitter and hid himself, refusing to tell them more. He went beyond the hills, to the world yonder, the whole extent of Gikuyu land. He was not yet exhausted and there spoke the message even louder. Still they laughed and poured scorn on him. Here they thought him dead. But disguised he came back here and settled.”

   Chege paused for a while as if to gather his breath. His eyes shone as if with inner power and then slowly he said. “We are his offspring. His blood flows in our veins.”

   Waiyaki stood as if dumb. The knowledge that he had in him the blood of this famous seer, who had been able to see the future, filled him with an acute sense of wonder. He could not speak; the only word which escaped him was, “Ha!” his father was still speaking: “He died here. Our fathers do not know where his grave is. But some say that he was carried up; by Murungu.”

   Chege stopped and slowly turned to Waiyaki. Waiyaki trembled freely. “I see you fear. You must learn first fear ...fear.... It was not only Mugo whom they rejected. When I told them about Siriana, they would not listen.”

   For the first time, Waiyaki felt really frightened. Unknown terror gripped him. He fought with it. “No doubt you wonder why I tell you all this Waiyaki wanted to cry out: “Don’t tell me more. I don’t want to hear more. No! No! No, Father!”’ Instead he only whispered. “Yes-es!”

   “You are the last in our line.” Waiyaki felt as if a heavy cloud was pressing down on his soul and he felt a strange sensation of suspension in his stomach. It was as if something, a presentiment, was moving towards him with all speed and he was powerless to prevent it. “Sit down,” his father spoke gently.

   Waiyaki’s legs had already began to lose strength and he sank onto the grass.

   “You are tired perhaps,” Chege said as he moved near his son. Waiyaki stopped trembling and hated himself for showing fear. Chege repeated slowly: “You see, when Mugo became bitter, he refused to tell them more.” Chege made another pause. His face and eyes were set as if he was trying to recall something long-forgotten. He was now standing just behind Waiyaki. He bent down and touched his son on the shoulder. Waiyaki realized that his father’s hand was trembling slightly. Chege withdrew his hand quickly and then with a loud tremor in his voice went on: “Now, listen my son. Listen carefully, for this is the ancient prophecy... I could not do more. When the white man came and fixed himself in Siriana, I warned all the people. But they laughed at me. May be I was hasty. Perhaps I was not the one Mugo often said you could not cut the butterflies with a panga. You could not spear them until you learnt and knew their ways and movement. Then you could trap, you could fight back.”

   Before he died, he whispered to his son the prophecy, the ancient prophecy: ‘salvation shall come from the hills. From the blood that flows in me, I say from the same tree, a son shall rise. And his duty shall be to lead and save the people! He said no more. Few knew the prophecy. Perhaps Kabonyi, who has betrayed the tribe, knows about it. I am old, my time is gone. Remember that you are the last in this line.
“Arise. Heed the prophecy. Go to the Mission place. Learn all the wisdom and all the secrets of the white man. But Waiyaki disregarded his father’s advice.

14. Read the following passage and answer the questions.

There was general uniformity between all the houses that lay scattered over this ridge. They consisted of round thatched huts standing in grounds of three or four. A natural hedge surrounded each household. Joshua’s house was different. His was a tin-roofed rectangular building standing quite distinctly by itself on the ridge. The tin roof was already decaying and let it rain freely, so on top of the roof could be seen little scraps of sacking that covered the very bad parts. The building, standing so distinctly and defiantly, was perhaps an indication that the old isolation of Mukuyu from the rest of the world was being broken down.

As yet, it was true, no town was near. Nairobi was far, a town not known to the hills. Siriana was still the nearest missionary centre: a big place with hospitals and a flourishing school taking boys and girls from all over the country. But the missionaries had not as yet penetrated into the hills, though they sent a number of disciples to work there. The people remained conservative, loyal to the ways of the land. Livingstone occasionally paid a visit to the hills, giving new life and energy to his various followers. His main work however, was being carried on by Joshua.

Joshua, Nyambura’s father, was now a middle-aged man who always preached in sharp ringing tones that spoke of power and knowledge. He, along with a few others, had been the first to be converted to the new faith. He was then a young man who ran from the hills and went to live with the white man in the newly established mission. He feared the revenge of the hills; the anger of his friends, betrayed. In Siriana he found a sanctuary and the white man’s power and magic. He learnt to read and write. The new faith worked in him till it came to possess him wholly. He renounced his tribe’s magic, power and ritual. He turned to and felt the deep presence of the one God. Had he not given the white man power over all? He learned of Jesus.

Behold, a virgin shall conceive,

And bear a son.

And shall call his name Immanuel.

He realised the ignorance of his people. He felt the depth of the darkness in which they lived. He saw the muddy water through which they waded unaware of the dirt and mud. His people worshipped Murungu, Mwenenyaga, Ngai. The unerring white man called the Gikuyu god the prince of darkness.

Isaiah, the white man’s seer, had prophesied of Jesus. He had told of the coming of a Messiah. Had Mugo wa Kibiro, the Gikuyu seer, ever foretold of such a saviour? No. Isaiah was great. He has told of Jesus, the Saviour of the world.
Those who refuse him are the children of darkness;
These, sons and daughters of the evil one, will go to Hell;
They will burn and burn forever more, world unending.

These strong words frightened Joshua and shook his whole body; shook him to the very roots of his being. He became baptized and it was only then that he felt at peace and stopped trembling.

He felt happiness which cut sharp into him, inflaming his soul. He had escaped Hell. He felt a new creature. That is always what he said at home and in church.

If anybody is in Christ, behold he is a new creature. He was new. He became a preacher, brave, having been freed from fear. He no longer feared Chege or what the hills and their inhabitants would say or do to him. He went back to Makuyu and preached with a vehemence and fury that frightened even his own old listeners. Few could resist that voice. Many came and some were converted. And they all together rejoiced and praised God.

But some went back to drinking; to dancing the tribal ritual, to circumcision. And Joshua day by day grew in wrath and vehemently condemned such behaviour. Perhaps the word had not taken root. Joshua himself was strict and observed the word to the letter. Religious uniformity in his own home was binding. He meant to be an example to all, a bright light that would show the way, a rock on which the weak would step on their way to Christ.

15. Read the excerpt below and then answer the questions that follow:-

He could not sleep. Thin rays of the moon passed through the cracks in the wall into the hut and fell at various spots on the floor. It was no good staring blankly at the hazy darkness in which every object lost its clear edges. Waiyaki wanted to talk to someone. That was what oppressed him: the desire to share his hopes, his yearnings and longings with someone, his plans in education. The desire for assurance and release. Twice he had tried to tell his mother, to ask her something. But each time he stood in front of her and he heard her shaky voice, he found himself talking of irrelevant things. It was strange that the tremor in her voice should set doubts darting in his soul.
After all, what was the longing, what was the something for which he yearned? Did he know it himself? Yet the hopes and desires kept on haunting him. They had followed him all his life.

He did not want to think. But thoughts came and flooded his heart. Strange chapters of his life unfolded before him. His young sister who had died early was the only person with whom he had been intimate. He had loved her, if that sort of closeness could be called love. He thought he loved the hills and their people. But they did not give him that something he could get from her. Then, he had been very small; many seasons before his second birth. He wondered why he remembered that time. But she was dead. And death was the end of everything, on this earth. After you were buried, you turned into a spirit. Waiyaki wondered if his sister was a spirit. A young good spirit. Was she watching him? He turned round, rather frightened. He felt guilty.

Waiyaki was superstitious. He believed the things that the people of the ridges believed. Siriana Mission had done nothing effective to change this. His father had warned him against being contaminated by the ways of the white man. Yet he sometimes wondered. Was the education he was trying to spread in the ridges not a contamination?

He wanted to sleep. From side to side he wriggled on his bed, trying to close his eyes and shut away these thoughts that would not let him alone. He thought: There is something unexplainable in the coming of the white man. He had found no resistance in the hills. Now he had penetrated into the heart of the country, spreading his influence. This influence could be disruptive. Muthoni had died on the high altar of this disruption. She had died with courage, probably still trying to resolve the conflict within herself in an attempt to reach the light. Since her death everything had gone from bad to worse, and probably conflicting calls and loyalties strove within the hearts of many. Not many were like Muthoni in courage. Waiyaki wondered where he was. Was he trying to create order and bring light in the dark?

The image of his sister, that of Muthoni and many others followed each other across his mind in quick succession, shadows that had no concrete form; shadows that came and went; sometimes merging, forming nothing. Then, for one moment, his life became one white blur. But only for a second. Then came the mist, dark with no definition. The clear edges of life had gone. He lay still, a little frightened, not knowing what to think or how to find a way out.

PETER STOCKMANN: I protest against the personal allusions.

DR. STOCKMANN: (imperturbably) — and that, not because he is like myself, descended from some old rascal of a pirate from Pomerania ... because that is who we are descended from....

Mocks Topical Analysis eeducationgroup.com
PETER STOCKMANN: An absurd legend. I deny it!
DR. STOCKMANN: ... but because he thinks what his superiors think, and holds the same opinions they hold. People who do that are, intellectually speaking, common people; and, that is why my magnificent brother Peter is in reality so very far from any distinction — and consequently also so far from being independent-minded.

PETER STOCKMANN: Mr. Chairman........!
HOVSTAD: So it is only the distinguished men that are liberal-minded in this country? That is a new one! (Laughter.)

DR. STOCKMANN: Yes, that is part of my new discovery too. And another part of it is that free-thinking is almost precisely the same thing as morality. That is why I maintain that it is absolutely irresponsible of the People's Messenger to proclaim, day in day out, the false doctrine that it is the masses, the crowd, the compact majority, that have the monopoly of liberal principles and morality — and that vice and corruption and every kind of intellectual depravity are the result of culture, just as all the filth that is draining into our Baths is the result of the tanneries up at Molledal! (Uproar and interruptions. DR. STOCKMAN” is undisturbed and goes on, carried away by his ardour, with a smile.) And yet this same People's Messenger can go on preaching that the living standards of the masses ought to be elevated! But, bless my soul, if the Messengers teaching is to be depended upon, this very elevation of the masses would mean nothing more or less than setting them straightaway upon the paths of Depravity Happily, the theory that culture demoralizes is only an old falsehood that our ancestors believed in and we have inherited. No. it is ignorance, poverty, ugly conditions of life, that do the devil’s work! In a house which does not get aired and swept every day—my wife Katherine maintains that the floor ought to be scrubbed as well, but that is debatable — in such a house let me tell you, people will lose within two or three years the power of thinking or acting in a moral manner. Lack of oxygen weakens the conscience. And there must be a plentiful lack of oxygen in very many houses in this town, judging from the fact that the whole ‘compact majority’ can be irresponsible enough to wish to build the towns prosperity on a quagmire of falsehood and deceit.

ASLAKSEN: We cannot allow such a grave accusation to be flung at our community.
A CITIZEN: I move that the Chairman rule the speaker out of order.
VOICES (angrily): (losing his self-control): Then I will go and shout the truth at every street corner! I will write it in other towns’ newspapers! The whole country shall know what is going on here!

HOVSTAD: It almost seems as if Dr. Stockmann’s intention were to ruin the town.
DR. STOCKMANN: Yes, my native town is so dear to me that I would rather ruin it than see it prosper upon a lie.

ASLAKSEN: This is really serious. (Uproar and whistles, MRS. STOCKMANN coughs in vain: her husband does not listen to her any longer.)
HOVSTAD: (shouting above the din): A man must be a public enemy who wishes to ruin a whole community!

DR. STOCKMANN: (with growing fervour): What does the destruction of a community matter, if it lives on lies? It ought to be razed to the ground. I tell you — All who live by lies ought to be wiped out like vermin! You will end up infecting the whole country; you will bring about such a state of things that the whole country will deserve to be destroyed. And if it ever comes to that,

Suppose after a time he deposes my father and makes himself the head of the family with a right to control our property. Do you think he has any moral right to it? Do you, Waiyaki? And do you think I am bound by any consideration to obey him? And if conditions become intolerable, it lies with me to rebel, not only against him but also against all that is harsh, unfair and unjust. Take Siriana Mission for example, the men of God came peacefully. They were given a place. Now see what has happened. They have invited their brothers to come and take all the land. Our country is invaded. This Government Post behind Makuyu, is a plague in our midst. And this hut-tax ..”

   He was exhausted. He looked around defiantly and yet sorrowfully. Then he began to breathe hard. He was becoming excited again. He waved his hands in the air and then gave a thud on the table. He let his eyes roll around as if he were speaking at a big political rally. Waiyaki had never seen Kinuthia like this before. And why should they, who had been educated at Siriana, be so vehement against it? It was just like his father, who had sent him to the Mission to which he had all his life objected. Perhaps life was a contradiction. Waiyaki felt something stir in him as he listened to Kinuthia. Perhaps Kinuthia was speaking for the sleeping hills, for the whole of Gikuyu country. Then he suppressed the feeling and thought of the new drive in education. Perhaps this was the answer to a people’s longings and hopes. For a moment he became lost in his contemplation of education and the plans he had in mind:
   “Come, Waiyaki. Tell us about this new Kiama.’
   It was Kamau who asked. Waiyaki lost his vision but he still watched the rain. This rain was a blessing; and the famine which people had feared would come if the drought had continued would now be averted. From the scoops flowed little narrow streams at and through the grass. They mingled and flowed on to join. Main stream, like a small river, like Honia. Or like a flood. Only this one would end and Honia River would forever flow.
   And the small river went down making a small murmuring sound, talking to itself, or to the ground. “Noah’s flood,” Waiyaki thought.Kinuthia spoke.
   “Yes. I think such a Kiama, to preserve the purity of our tribal customs and our way of life, should be formed now.” Waiyaki had heard about this Kiama. He knew the drive came from Kabonyi. Waiyaki feared they would give him a place in the leadership of this Kiama, which was meant to embrace all the ridges. He did not feel enthusiastic about it. He wanted to concentrate on education. Perhaps the teaching of Livingstone,that education was of value and his boys should not concern themselves with what the government was doing or politics, had found a place in Waiyaki’s heart. It rained on, the downpour almost slashing the sun-scorched grass. What was it? And still it rained, with the little streams gathering and joining together. He saw what they were doing —

Carrying away the soil.
Corroding, eating away the earth.
Stealing the land.

And that was the cry, the cry on every ridge. Perhaps the sleeping lions would sleep no more, for they were all crying, crying for the soil. The earth was important to the tribe. That was why Kinuthia and others like him feared the encroachment of the white man. They feared what had happened in Kiambu, Nyeri and Murang’a. The new settlers at Siriana wore the same face. And Waiyaki was thinking, was Mugo wa Kibiro right? One day the white man would go. And for a time Waiyaki remembered his father and that prophecy.

Suddenly he became angry, not with the white man or Kinuthia. He was angry with the rain.

Section C- QUESTIONS

1. Read the story given below and answer the questions that follow:-

THE HARE AND THE TORTOISE

The hare was always laughing at the tortoise because he walked so slowly. “Really I don’t know why you bother to go at all,” she sneered. ‘By the time you get there it will all be over- whatever it is.’

The tortoise laughed. “I may be slow.’ He said, ‘but I bet I can get to the end of the field before you can. If you want to race, ill prove it to you.’

Expecting an easy victory the hare agreed and she bounced off as fast as she could go. The tortoise plodded steadily after her.

Now it was in the middle of a very hot sunny day and before long, the hare started to feel a little drowsy. I think ill just take a short nap under this hedge. ‘She said to herself.’ Even if the tortoise passed by ill catch him up in a flash. The hare lay down in the shade and was soon fast asleep. The tortoise plodded on under the midday sun. Much later, the hare awoke. It was later than she had intended but she looked round confidently ‘No sign of old tortoise, I see, even if I did have rather more than forty winks.’

Mocks Topical Analysis
Away she went, running through the short grass and the growing corn, leaping ditches and brambles with ease. In a very short time she turned the last corner and paused for a moment to look at the place where the rope was to end. There, not a yard from the finishing line was the tortoise, plodding steadily on. One foot after another, nearer and nearer to the end of the race.

With a great bounce the hare streaked forward. It was too late. Though she threw herself panting over the line, the tortoise was there before her.

‘Now do you believe me?’ Asked the tortoise. But the hare was too out of breath to reply.

2. POETRY

   CRAZY PETER PRATTLES

So what is the mountain deal about the minister’s ailing son that he makes boiling news?

How come it was not whispered
when Tina’s hospital bed crawled with maggots and her eyes oozed pus because the doctors lacked gloves?

What about Kasajja’s only child who died because the man with the key to the oxygen room was on leave?

I have seen queues of emaciated mothers clinging to babies with translucent skins faint in line
and the lioness of a nurse
commanding tersely
“Get up or leave the line’

Didn’t I hear it rumoured that the man with the white mane and black robes
whose mouth stores the justice of the land ushered a rape case out of court because the seven-year-old failed to testify?
Anyway, I only remember these things
when I drink,
they are indeed tipsy explosion

I MET A THIEF

On the beach, on the coast,
Under the idle, whispers coconut towers,
Before the growling, foaming, waves,
I met a thief, who guessed I had
An innocent heart for her to steal.

She took my hand and led me under,
The intimate cashew boughs which shaded
The downy grass and peeping weeds
She jumped and plucked the nuts for me to suck:
She sang and laughed and pressed close
I gazed; her hair was like the wool of a mountain sheep,
Her eyes, a pair of brown –black beans floating in milk.
Juicy and round as plantain shoots
Her legs, arms and neck:
And like wine-gourds her pillowy breasts:
Her throat uttered fresh banana juice:
Matching her face-smooth and banana-ripe.

I touched-but long I even tasted,
My heart had flowed from me into her beast:
And then she went-high and south-
And left my carcass roasting in thee

There I see her coming
With borrowed steps
Like a coward ghost
Out of grass covered graveyard

a poisonous pest that infects the city’s plantation diseasing the young

There I see her

tourists and bosses

There I see her coming

yet always hounded by spies

I stand to see her when the forged coin is found

5. ORAL LITERATURE

Read the passage below and then answer the questions that follow:

THE WICKED CHIEF

There lived once a wicked chief. Nobody liked him, because of his wickedness. He was wicked to old men and women. By pretending to be kind he tried to be popular to young men who lived in that country. When the chief won over young men, they all liked him.

One day, the chief called all the young men and told them, “My friends, don’t you see?” They asked, “What?” You should kill all of them. Everybody should kill his father.”

Ah: (that they should kill their fathers). As a result, everybody whose father was old brought him to be killed. This one went and brought him to be killed. This one went and brought his father to be killed. The other went brought his father to be killed. They killed all the old men, leaving one only.

He was a father of a man who said no. “Why should the chief kill all old men and why would I send my father to be killed?” He got down and went to dig a large hole and concealed it nicely. He sent his father there, where he had dug. He fetched wood and put it across and coved it with soil, making a small hole for air to pass through. At that time, they had finished to kill all the old men.

When the chief finished executing them, he then called all the young men. “My friends we have now finished killing all our old men. This is a cow I am giving to you. I am so happy we have got rid of these old men, so go and kill the cow. When you have killed the cow, cut the best part of its meat and bring it to me. If you don’t bring it, you yourself are not safe.” (That is all right) eh;
The young men rushed out and slaughtered the cow, which is the best part of the meat of a cow? They were worried

They went and cut the liver and sent it to him. He asked whether or not that was the best part of the meat. They answered yes. They added part of the bile. He said that wasn’t the best part of the meat and they should go and find it quickly. The people became more worried.

Every night the young man secretly took food to his father. One day he took food to his father, who asked about the news of the town. He said, “My father, now we are suffering. When we killed all the old men, the chief gave us a cow to go and kill. When we killed the cow, he said we must both find the sweetest and the best part of the meat and bring to him, that if we do not bring them, we are not safe ourselves. This is what is worrying us.” The old man laughed, but asked him if he knew the sweetest part of the meat. He said no. He again asked if he did not know the bitterest part. He said no. “Then the sweetest and the bitterest is the tongue. When you go, cut the tongue and sent it to him and say that is the sweetest part of the meat and the bitterest.”
The man rushed home while all the people sat down, undecided about what to do. If something had not happened they might have thrown the whole meat away and run away. When the boy arrived he said, “My friends take the tongue of the cow in.” they cut the tongue for him, and he took it to the chief’s palace.

He went and threw it down and said, “Chief, see the sweetest part of the meat and the bitterest part also.”

The chief sat down quietly and finally said, “You did not kill your father. Speak the truth. You have not killed your father.”

He said, “It is the truth, I didn’t kill him. When all the other men were killing their own fathers I went and hid mine.”

He said, “You are the son of a wise old man. The sweetest and the bitterest part of a meat is the tongue. As for that all these young men are fools. Why should somebody send his father to be killed? But if you want the sweetest part of the meat, find the tongue, were it not for your tongue, you would not have an enemy: it is also because of your tongue that you will not have a friend.”

Would you know my name if I saw you in heaven?
Would it be the same if I saw you in heaven?
I must be strong and carry on, cause I know I don’t belong here in heaven.

Would you hold my hand if I saw you in heaven?
Would you help me stand if I saw you in heaven?
I’ll find my way through night and day, cause I know I can’t just stay here in heaven

Time can bring you down, time can bend your knees
Time can break the heart; have you ‘begging’ “please” ‘begging’ “please”
Beyond the door there’s peace, I’m sure
And I know there will be no more tears in heaven.
Would you know my name if I saw you in heaven?
Would you be the same if I saw you in heaven?
I must be strong and carry on, cause I know I don’t belong here in heaven.

You see those market women gaping their mouths?
The glory of its inside has robbed them of words
I tell you the feathery seats the gold steering
The TV the radio station the gear!
He can converse with all the world presidents
While driving in the back seat with his darly
Between his legs without the driver seeing a thing!
Ha! Ha! Ha!

Look at the driver chasing the children away
They want to see the pistol in the door pocket
Or the button that lets out bullets from the machine
Through the eyes of the car – Sshhhhhhhhh
Lets not talk about it.

But I tell you that Motoka can run
It sails like a lijato, speeds like a swallow
And doesn’t know anyone stupid on its way
The other day I heard
But look at its behind, that mother of twins!

The outcome? Conflicting rumours
As to what faction murdered
The one man who, had he survived
Might have ruled us without corruption
Not that it matters now:
We’re busy collecting the dead
Counting them, hard though it is
To be sure what side they were on What’s left of their bodies and faces
Tells of no need but for burial
And mutilations was practiced
By right, left and centre alike
As for the children and women
Who knows what they wanted
Apart from the usual things?

Whole villages burnt to the ground
New cities in disrepair
The war is over, somebody must have won
Somebody will have won. When peace is declared

   Why Zebra has stripped skin

Long ago, man tamed only the dog. Before he started taming any other animal, it was said that the donkey could also be tamed. This story came from one hunter.

One day while hunting, this hunter killed a large animal, which was too heavy for him to carry along. So, as he wondered how to carry his kill he saw a donkey pass nearby and an idea came to his mind. “Why not place this carcass on the donkey so that it can help me?” he wondered. He did not know what would happen if he tried this because the donkey was also a wild animal. Nevertheless he decided to try.

So he followed the donkey and luring it with sweet words and grass, the donkey allowed him to place his load on its back without resistance. He then led the way until they arrived home. After unloading the donkey, he gave it more grass and some water. It ate and drunk and appeared happy. From that day, the donkey never left the hunter’s homestead; and he gave the donkey food and drink daily. The donkeys multiplied and there were many donkeys in this homestead, all helping the hunter to carry his loads. Soon, the story went round that somebody had tamed a donkey, which he was using as a beast of burden. Villagers came to see for themselves and they were impressed with the way the hunter’s donkeys were working. Having satisfied their curiosity, they also went out into the wild to look for donkeys to tame. The donkey became a famous beast.
of burden in the whole village and beyond, carrying all the heavy loads that men and women could not even lift with assistance.

As all this was happening, the donkeys which were left in the wild did not know what was going on. They would only see their friends go away with men and women never to return. They came to understand that they had been deserted only after most of their friends had been taken away. The few who were left started to hide deep in the woods to avoid any contact with human beings. But their efforts to hide were all in vain! Human beings had realized that donkeys were very useful animals. So they made every possible effort to catch them even from deep in the forest.

This problem disturbed the wild donkeys. Many of their kind had been captured by human beings. The rumours spreading around were that the captured ones were made to work very hard with only little food, since there was no time to graze, while those left in the wild grazed the whole day and even during the night.

Indeed, this was frightening. The rest of the donkeys decided to act quickly, lest they too be captured. They called a meeting at which they discussed what should be done to stop the movement of donkeys into people’s homes. When the meeting came to a stalemate, one donkey suggested that they should seek help from Hare since he was known to be cunning and clever. All agreed to seek advice from Hare.

The next morning, the donkey representative went to Hare. Hare was only too willing to help. Therefore Hare asked him to tell all his friends to come to his compound early the next morning. They agreed. When they arrived, they found Hare with whitewash in a large bucket and a brush in his hand. They were all at a loss as to know how this whitewash was going to help them. When they enquired, Hare attempted to explain but they could not understand.

So Hare asked one of them to volunteer for a demonstration but none wanted to. Then Hare approached one old donkey and whispered in its ear saying, “Once you have been painted, you will not be a donkey any more and human beings will not take you away.” The old donkey said, “I will volunteer because if the human beings take me and put loads on my back, I will die.” So the Hare quickly started painting stripes of whitewash on this donkey. Soon, the entire body of the donkey was filled with white and grey stripes. When the other donkeys looked at the painted donkey, they admired it and some wanted to be painted. But others came to the painted donkey and it whispered something in their ears. So they rushed and crowded around Hare and although he warned them that they had to be careful with the whitewash, they did not heed his warning. They jostled, pushed, fought and even bit each other in the struggle to be the next one to be painted. It was during this struggle to be painted that one donkey toppled the bucket containing the whitewash, pouring the entire contents on the grass from where it could not be recovered. The donkeys that had been painted remained in the forest because human beings did not capture them for they looked different from the domesticated ones. The striped donkeys changed their name from donkey to Zebra. All the ones that remained unpainted after the whitewash were captured by the human beings and taken to their homes to labour for them up to this day. And there ends my story.

Love is a universal migraine,
A bright stain on the vision
Blotting out reason.
Symptoms of true love
Are leaness, jealousy,
Laggard dawns;

Listening for a knock.
Waiting for a sign:

For a touch of her fingers
In a darkened room,
For a searching look

Take courage, lover!
Could you endure such pain
At any hand but hers?

Don’t cry baby
Sleep little baby
Father will nurse you
Sleep baby sleep

Little bird flitting away to the forest so fast
Tell me, little bird, have you seen her
Have you seen my crying baby’s mother?

She went to the river at early dew
A pot upon her head
But down the water floats her pot
And the path from the river is empty

Shall I take him under the palm?
Where the green shade rests at noon?
   Oh no, no
      For the thorns will prick my baby
Shall I take him under the giant baobab
Where the silk cotton plays with the wing?

Oh no, no
For the termite- eaten bough will break
And crush my little baby
My little sleeping baby
The day is long and the sun grows hot
So, sleep, my little baby, sleep
For mother is gone to a far, far land- Alas!
   She is gone beyond the river.

Shall we all die on the earth?

I SHALL RETURN
I shall return, I shall return again
To laugh and love and watch with wonder eyes
At garden noon the forest fires burn,
Wafting their blue black smoke to sapphire skies

That bathe the brown blades of bending grasses,
And realize once more my thousand dreams
Of waters rushing down the mountain passes
I shall return to hear the fiddle and fife
Of village dances, dear delicious tunes
That stir the hidden depths of native life
Stray melodies of the dim-remembered tunes
I shall return, I shall return again
To ease my mind of long, long years of pain

17. ORAL LITERATURE.

Read the story below and then answer the questions which follow:-

When she is the only one at the foot of the mortar-stones the hen only scratches with one paw. For she has, so she thinks, plenty of time to choose her grains for corn.

Ponda certainly was not the only girl in M’badane, but she had only to appear for the most beautiful, and far from being fastidious and difficult to please as might have been expected, she was only too anxious to find a husband, as she was afraid of growing into an old maid, for she had already turned sixteen. On their side suitors were not lacking: every single day her girl-friends’ brothers and fathers, young men and old men from other villages, sent griots and dialís bearing gifts and fine words to ask her hand in marriage.

If it had only depended on herself Ponda would certainly by now have a baby tied on her back, either good, or bad-tempered and crying. But in the matter of marriage, as in all things a girl must submit to her father’s will. It is her father who must decide whom she is to belong to: a Prince, a rich dioula or a common badolo who sweats in the field in the sun; it is for her father to say it he wishes to bestow her on a powerful marabout or an insignificant talibe.

Now Mor, the father of Ponda had demanded neither the immense bride-price of a rich man, nor the meager possession of a badolo; still less had he thought of offering his daughter to a marabout or to a marabout’s disciple in order to enlarge his place in paradise. Mor simply told all those who come to ask for his daughter, whether for themselves, for their masters, for their sons or for their brothers:

“I will give Ponda without demanding bride-price or gifts, to the man who will kill an ox and send me the meat by the agency of a hyena; but when it arrives not a single morsel of the animal must be missing.”

That was more difficult than making the round-cared Narr-the-Moor keep a secret. It was more difficult than entrusting a calabash full of honey to a child and expect him not to even dip his little finger in. You might as well try prevent the sun from leaving his home in the morning or retiring to bed to the end of the day. You might as well forbid the thirsty sand to drink the first drop s of the first rains. Entrust meat to Bouki-the-Hyena? You might as well entrust a pot of butter to a burning fire. Entrust meat to Bouk and prevent her from touching it.
But how can you entrust meat; even dried meat to a hyena, and prevent her to touch it? It was an impossible task, so said the griots as they ended their way home to their masters: so said the mothers who had come on their sons’ behalf, so said the old men who had come to ask for the beautiful Ponda for themselves.

A day’s walk from M’Badane lay the village of N’diour. The inhabitants of N’Diou were by no means ordinary folk’ they were, or so they believed, the only men and the only women since earliest times to have tamed the double hyenas, with whom in fact they lived in perfect peace and good understanding. It is true that the people of N’Diour did their share to maintain these good relations.

Every Friday they killed a bull which they offered to Bouki-the-Hyena and her tribe. Of all the young men of N’Diour, Birane was the best at wrestling as well as working in the fields, he was also the most handsome. When his griot brought back presents that Mor had refused, and told him the conditions which Ponda’s father had laid down, Birane said to himself: “I shall be the one to win Ponda for my bed.” He killed an ox, dried the meat, and put it in a goatskin; the skin was enclosed in a coarse cotton bag and the whole thing placed in the middle of ‘a truss straw.

On Friday, when Boruki came with her family to partake of the offering given by the people of N’Diou Birane went to her and said, ‘My griot, who has no more sense than a babe at the breast and who is as stupid as an ox has brought the fine gifts that I sent to Ponda, the daughter of Mor of N’Badane. I am certain that if you, whose wisdom is great and whose tongue is as honey, took this simple truss of straw to N’Badane to the house of Mor you would only need to say, “Birane asks for your daughter, “for him to grant her to you”.

“I have grown old, Birane, and my back is no longer very strong, but N’Bar, the oldest of my children, is full of vigour and he has inherited a little of my wisdom. He will go to N’Badane for you, and I am sure that he will acquaint himself well of your mission.”

M’Bar set off very early in the morning, the truss of straw on his back. When the dew moistened the truss of straw the pleasant Odour of the meat began to float in the air. M’bar-thehyena stopped, lifted his nose sniffed to the right, sniffed to the left, then resumed his way, a little less hurriedly it seemed. The smell grew stronger, the Hyena stopped again, bared his teeth, thrust his nose to the right, to the left, into the air, then turned round and sniffed to the four winds. He resumed his journey, but now hesitating all the time, as if held back by this penetrating, insistent smell which seemed to come from all directions.

Not being able to resist it any longer, M’Bar left the track that led from N’Diour to N’Badane, made huge circling detours in the veld, ferreting to the right, ferreting to the left continually retracing his steps, and took three whole days instead of one to reach N’Badane.

N’Bar was certainly not in the best of tempers when he entered Mor’s home. He did not wear the pleasant expressions of a messenger who comes to ask a great favour. This smell of meat that impregnated all the grass and all the bushes of the veld and still impregnated the huts of N’Bedane and the courtyard of Mor’s home, had made him forget on the ‘way from N’Diour all the wisdom that Biouki had instilled into him, and stilled the gracious words that one always expects from a petitioner. M’Bar scarcely even unclenched his teeth to say: Assalamou aleyokoum!” and nobody could even hear his greeting; but as he threw down the truss of straw from his back had bent under its weight, he muttered in a voice that was more than disagreeable, ‘Bitane of N’Diour sends you this truss of straw and asks for your daughter. Under the very eyes of M’Bar the Hyena, first astonished, then indignant, then covetous Mor cut the liana ropes that bound the truss of straw, opened it up and took out the bag of coarse cotton; from the coarse cotton bag of he took out the goat-skin and from the goatskin the pieces of dried meat.

‘Go’, ‘Mor, said to M’Bar-the-hyena, who nearly burst with rage at the sight of all that meat he had unsuspectingly earned for three days, and which was spread out, there without his being able to touch a single bit. (for the folk of N’Badane were not like the inhabitants of N’Diour, and in M’Badane hunting spears were lying all round). ‘Go,’ said Mor, ‘go and tell Birane that I give him my daughter. Tell him that he is not only the most spirited and the strongest of all the young men of N’Diour, but he is also the shrewdest.

He managed to entrust meat to you, hyena, he will be able to keep a sharp watch on his wife and outwit all tricks.'

“SYMPATHY”
I know what the caged bird feels, alas!
When the sun is bright on the upland slopes;
When the wind stirs soft through the springing grass
And the river flows like a stream of glass;
When the first bird sings and the first bud opens,
And the faint perfume from its petals steals-
I know what the caged bird feels!

I know why the caged bird beats his wing
Till its blood is red on the cruel bans;
For he must fly back for his perch and cling
When he rather would be on the branch a – swing;
And a pain still throbs in the old, old scars
And they pulse again with a keener sting –
I know why he beats his wing!

I know why the caged bird sings, ah me,
When his wing is bruised and his blossom sore,
When he beats his bars and would be free;
It is not a song of joy or glee,
But a prayer that he sends from his heart’s deep core,
But a plea, that upward to Heaven he flings –
I know why the caged bird sings!

Enterprising youth—young, industrious people

Challenges of everyday life-ups and downs faced in life

Disorientate—make unstable.

If an author has genius, he suffers the penalty of genius. If he has only talents, various cares and worries make life extremely miserable. He takes great pains to compose. He meets with continuous disappointments at his ability to express himself. He is also faced with the difficulty of gaining the public ear. A literary life is, therefore, mostly an unhappy one.

Young writers hope that they will become famous if they just throw that poem at the world's feet. They believe that they have only to get that novel printed to be acknowledged at one as a new height in literature.

No. Editors and publishers are a practical body of men; they conduct their business in the hardest times of profit and loss accounts. They cannot therefore be sympathetic to young authors.

Whereas they are expected to place the best literature before the public their main interest is making profit.

It would be generally difficult for a young author to have his book published. After his book is brought out, he should be prepared to face hostile critics.

Keats is mentioned in order to show the damage that savage criticism can do a sensitive writer.

A writer should be silent when criticized.

Became editors and publishers are only interested in making a profit.

Men of letters—writers a new light in literature—an important writer.

Chastisement—torture, punishment.

The root of tribal and racial misunderstanding is ethnocentrism

Because customs in each society evolve to meet specific needs

Illustration: Nomadic tribes of Brazil and Australia kill their old in order to avoid being delayed as they move in search of pasture and from attacks

The irony in the way the nomads treated their old is that they thought it to be kind to kill their own old ones. They preferred to kill their own (old) if they burdened them than to let them be tortured and killed by their enemies. The bottom line is the old would have died, why kill them yourself?

By contrasting how the old are treated in Kenya and Brazil/Australia, the writer shows that there is no standard criteria for treating the old across the world. Thus we should not be ethnocentric.

The writer's attitude is that the treatment was justifiable because it helped them to meet a need: Feed their animals in new field and avoid the enemies.

Old people are held in very high esteem, here in Kenya as in many parts of Africa.

Ethnocentrism

Root—the cause/origin

Exalt—uplift, hold in high esteem

GENERAL GUIDELINES

STEP 1
Read the composition through and award an impression grade on the basis of inter alia, the following:

(i) Communicative Ability
   The candidate should communicate clearly despite some errors of vocabulary, idiom and sentence construction. Ideally the vocabulary should be appropriate and effective while idiomatic expressions should be vivid and relevant. Sentence construction should be varied in terms of length, form and function.

(ii) Linguistic ability
   The very able candidate should strike you as outstanding because of:
   - excellent use of language
   - ability to organize and develop his or her work.

STEP II
Read the composition a second time and underline all the errors or take any other appropriate measure. This is important because it justifies the awarded in step I above.

ERRORS AND MARKING SYMBOLS

TYPES OF ERRORS
Major errors are tense and verb formations/spelling/agreement/syntax/omission. These errors interfere with the flow of communication.

Minor errors may be where a student ‘misuses’ vocabulary of a structure but this does not particularly affect communication. Such errors may be said to be the result of experimentation and/or carelessness.
Blatant irrelevancy occurs when a student veers from the point of the composition or introduces irrelevant material. Stylistic weaknesses are typified, for example, by the overuse of simple sentences, the repetition of vocabulary indicating a limited range or the use of slang in an effort to impress the examiner with his or her knowledge of current use! Contradiction of instructions (rubric) occurs when a student either does not write enough or writes too much as a result of failing to understand or read the instruction carefully. Minor irrelevancy occurs when a student veers from the subject although the main point of the composition is still maintained.

ACTION
If a candidate: (i) does not answer the compulsory question, award 00 regardless of whether he/she has answers to two other questions from the subsequent section or not (ii) answers question 1 and 2 from the subsequent section, mark all and record marks for question 1 and the best ark for the subsequent question (iii) writes an essay that borders on cheating e.g. memorized a passage, treat as case of cheating and award 00 (iv) sets his own question and answers it. This is a deliberate attempt to evade questions set for him/her award 00.

IRRELVANCY
(i) Consistent distortion of question, evasion of question, writing on a totally different subject with a clumsy attempt at connecting the essay with the subject given, inclusion of memorized passages e.t.c.
(ii) The question is given an unacceptable or questionable interpretation
(iii) Essay does not address the subject given or contains long semi-relevant digressions or lacks coherence

ACTION
Judge the irrelevancy as either resulting from:
(i) candidate’s poor understanding of the subject
(ii) A deliberate attempt to deceive

The examiner marks the essay, gives a linguistic mark and comments on the nature of the irrelevancy, then deduct up to 4mks. However, if the essay is totally irrelevant then award 00.

BREVITY
Candidate may not write the required length of composition
(i) If essay is less than 200 words and more than 175 words deduct 1mk (AD)
(ii) If essay is less than 175 words, then deduct 2mks(AD)
(iii) With question 1, if essay is less than 150 words then deduct 1mk (AD), but if 150 words or more no deduction is made.

Ironic instance in ‘An Enemy of the People’ are:
The mayor is hidden in the printing room by Aslaksen and Horstad when the Doctor comes in Dr Stockmann does not know this yet the readers are aware. It is only when he sees the mayor’s hat and walking stick that the doctor realizes that the mayor is in the building-this is ironic.

Dr. stockman entrusts his articles to the people messenger and is convinced that it would be published the next day, Aslaksen is to personality supervise its printing word for word. The later on turn against doctor stockman and refuse to have the articles printed. This is ironic.

The title of the book is ironic. Dr. stockman who intends to save the compact majority or the masses from ignorance, poverty and ugly condition of life, falsehood and deceit, is branded ‘a public enemy’ who wishes to ruin the whole community.

The great splendid, much praised Baths have lost much money. On the contrary it has been discovered they are….a white, polished sepulcher” the greatest possible danger to the public health. All the affluence up at molledal, all that skimming filth is inflicting the water in the conduit-pipes leading to the reservoir and the same filth oozes to the shore zoo. To confirm this, the Doctor says he investigated the matter carefully and cases of illness among the visitors such as typhoid and gastric fever have been witnessed.

6. (a) The play book

Contextual intro- The society in Henrick Ibsen’s play is faced with mynad problems such as greed, abuse of power, betrayal, hypocrisy, corruption just to mention a few.

These problems impact negatively on the society as described below.

N/B Consider any other relevant general or centralized introduction

i. The mayor’s domineering character where he wants to be the centre of attention.
   - It blinds him to the good others can do, for example, his brother Dr. Stockmann who genuinely wants to solve a problem
   - He tells him to subordinate himself to the authorities.

   (b) Nr. Stockmann’s enormous pride is satirized.
   - He does not listen to the mayor- he does not want to withdraw his report.
   - Quarrels with the mayor, - he does not want to withdraw his report.
   - Declared an enemy of the people.

   (c) Mayor’s corrupt nature leads him to fail to see the obvious problem of the town’s Baths
   - Wants a fake report released and cosmetic changes made to an obviously polluted water supply and the contaminated Baths.

(d) The town has a corrupt press
   - They are also highly unreliable
   - Do not publish a genuine report but substitute it with the mayor’s fake one.
   - Proceed on a scheme of misinformation

(e) A gullible citizenship
   - Believe what leaders tell them without questioning them
   - Are likely to be used/misused as it happened during Dr. Stockmann’s meeting.
   - Vote/declare the doctor as enemy
   - Stone/pelt his house with stones.

(f) Nepotism
Peter Stockmann secures his brother a job with the Baths committee in order to contain him. Hence does not allow his brother to correct him. He tells him, ‘You have no right to individual opinion.

   - This fuels corruption in the society.

(g) Betrayal and hypocrisy
   - The press men pledge their support for Dr. Stockmann earlier. Later they turn against him hence frustrate him and his effort to improve the baths.
   - The mayor knows very well the problems haunting the Baths but he does not want to take any action because of his selfish interests/he’s protecting his job and political career.

   (consider any relevant thematic view; (introduction 02mks- language 04mks) content 12mks i.e. 3x4 pts) conclusion 2mks.

Conclusion- The above society is unlikely to realize any prosperity because the leaders who are supposed to show good examples are at the eye of the storm. Worse still the citizens are vulnerable and are easily manipulated by politicians.
HENRICK IBSEN, AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE
INTRODUCTION

Corruption involves using one's power/position/authority in a dishonest/illegal way in order to get an advantage for oneself. In many societies, those who wield power at various levels notoriously perpetuate this vice. It becomes par and parcel of society when it is institutionalized as the general public bride to have service done. Dealing with corruption is tricky as the officials would use all the means/tricks even threats to maintain the status quo.

A general introduction approach defining corruption and how it fights back Corruption is evident in the play, "An Enemy of the People." Peter Stockmann, who is the mayor, abuses his authority to frustrate the findings of Dr. Stockmann. The doctor who intends to clean the rot in the society ends up sucked up by the vice and is labeled an enemy of the people at the end of the play. The forces of corruption led by the mayor are too powerful for him hence, he has to throw in the towel having been rejected by the people.

A contextualized introductory approach. The introduction must capture...how corruption fights back, if not, award 1mark.

ACCEPT EITHER OF THE TWO AND ANY RELEVANT ONE

CONTENT

C (i) Dr Stockmann’s experience vs. the mayor’s reaction.
- Dr Stockman, the medical officer of the bath has state in his report that the public utility is contaminated and hence, a health hazard to the town residents. He suggests that the whole piping system should be re-done.
- The mayor would not listen to this as he argued that replacement of the conduit pipes is too expensive. The residents could therefore be taxed heavily to meet the cost.
  - He wants to compromise Dr Stockman by telling him to keep quiet and publicly deny the report. P38

C (ii) role of press
- Dr Stockman had given the press a copy of his report for publication so as to sensitize the public of the health hazard.
- However the mayor uses his influence to manipulate billing, Hovstad and Aslaksen and so, they refuse to publish the report in the “people’s messenger”

10. Enrick Ibsen: An enemy of the people
Doctor Stockman faces many obstacles on his way to achieve his purpose.
Discuss this with reference to “An Enemy of the people”
Introduction

Doctor Stockmann discovers that the Battus have been contaminated and pose a risk to the town dwellers’ lives. After investigations that confirm his research findings, he decides to make this known to the public and have the effects of the contamination reversed. However, he meets a lot of opposition from different quarters.

Content

The obstacles Dr. Stockmann faces are:

- His brother Peter Stockmann does not want him to make this revelation to the people because he is the chairman of the Battus committee.
- Claims that it would be very costly to reconstruct the Battus and this would directly affect the people’s finances.
- The pressmen are not ready to publish the report for Dr. Stockmann in the press.
- They initially support Dr. Stockmann but they turn against him to support the major (Peter Stockmann).
- The masses refuse to listen to his explanation and arguments about the Battu. Instead, they support Peter Stockmann and see Dr. Stockmann as an enemy of the people, even when he is fighting for their welfare.
- They heckle him and even go to stone his house.
- The landlord asks him to vacate the house he is living in because he fears what the masses will say. He faces a situation where he will be left homeless or forced to leave the county.
- The captain cannot even ship lime out of the country because the ship owner cannot allow him to as he is also terminated from his job.

11. An enemy of the people: Ibsen Henrik

Using illustrations from the text show how the theme of betrayal has been portrayed

Peter Stockmann betrays his brother Dr. Stockmann

➢ He makes sure his ideas are not put in writing i.e. his report not published
➢ He makes sure that his brother is dismissed from his job
➢ He also declares his brother an enemy of the people

The press betrays Doctor and his family

➢ They accept his report but later on decamps it
➢ They refuse to print the report which they had initially accepted to do so
➢ They go to Dr. Stockmann’s home after declaring him an enemy of the people. In doing so, they betray the community and Dr. Stockmann

The theme is brought out through the compact majority (citizen)

➢ They refuse to listen to the Doctor’s talk on the baths yet it is for their own interest and benefit
➢ They declare him an enemy of the people
➢ They even destroy his house by stoning it
➢ They also tore his trouser
➢ Leaders also betray the society
➢ They are corrupt e.g. the mayor makes sure that Dr. Stockmann’s report is not published instead he publishes his own
➢ They are adamant to change. Peter Stockmann convinces the compact majority that change will make them pay more amount on tax
They (leaders) are out to cover their own interest and are always on the negative; e.g. Peter Stockmann opposes the good ideas brought out by his brother

12. Compulsory set text: The River Between KKN

Introduction (2mks) Indeed Kameno and Makuyu are ridges steeped in rivalry, Kameno is regarded the home of traditionalist who want to keep the tribes customs pure, while Makuyu is the home of Christians represented by Joshua, Christians do not see eye to eye with traditionalists especially on the issue of circumcision. Similarly Waiyaki is said to have betrayed the tribe by attending Joshua’s church service and intending to marry a Christian girl who is uncircumcised. At the height of this rivalry a newly converted Christian’s hut is burnt down at Kameno

Points content
(i) There is serious rivalry as to where leadership had to be left by the first man and woman — Gikuyu and Mumbi. Each ridge wants to lay sole claim to this leadership. This is symbolized by the fight between Kamau and Kinuthia. The fight sparks from the insults they hurl to each other. Kamau laughs at Kinuthia because his father died poor while Kinuthia calls Kamau’s fisher a convert to the Whiteman’s religion.

(ii) On another front, Waiyaki and Kamau are bitter rivals. Kamau has always hated Waiyaki since their childhood because he always up staged him. He even ordered him, to stop fighting Kinuthia when they were children. Kamaı had always felt humiliated since he was much older than Waiyaki. Kamau also feels he has lost Nyambura to Waiyaki. He claims to have loved her so much to the extent of hovering around her home even odd hours to find opportunity to declare his love. The only opportunity he gets at Honia river is snatched by his rival Walyaki who comes unexpectedly. The fact that Nyambura and Waiyak embrace cuts him deep like a sharp knife and be declares to himself that Waiyaki will remain a rival to death p. 104. similarly, Waiyaki heals him(Kamau) when he was worse, Kamau’s father rebukes him for remaining resentful

(iii) Waiyaki and Kabonyi are vying for the leadership of the ridges Waiyaki is leading people in the acquisition of the Whiteman’s education in order to prepare them to use their wits/ wisdom to fight back. But Kabonyi is more direct and forceful and feels be can use he newly formed Kiama to rise against the Whiteman. He tells the people (a meeting in school) not to allow themselves to be led by the youth and poses the question. ‘Did 4’ie tail ever lead the head; the child the father or the cubs the lion?’ p93. Even when an inter — ridge committee is formed to oversee the building of new schools; Kaboyi is left out due to rivalry. Feeling humiliated the old man is led home by his dog. Kamau loudly pronounces that he will kill Waiyaki. Kabonyi even opposes the construction of invatories at Mariashonj school saying the bushes were just sufficient in a scheme of hitting back at Waiyaki. The last show down is do or die affair Kabonyi effectively utilkes the oath to completely rout his opponent (Waiyaki). Waiyaki refuses to publicly diswn Nyambura, a woman he loves so much despite she being a Christian and uncircwncisdê As a result the people he has led all through disown him and surrender him to the Kiami Perhaps Kabonyi’s intense hatred for Waiyaki could be quenched this way and being the founder of the Kiama he will firmly deal with the teacher.

Conclusion
Albeit the rivalry in existence just as Waiyaki perceives things the. only solution Is to accommodate both tradition and modernity with equal measure. Without this integration/ blend it... is difficult for the society to prosper. This explains the death of Muthoni and the denial of Waiyaki — a visionary leader.

13. HENRICK IBSEN ‘AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE’

Peter stockman is Dr. Stockman’s elder brother and Mayor to the Municipal council. He is also the chairman of the Bath establishment committee. (Start by ringing out clearly the meaning of traits— cunning sadistic, charitable and considerate)

1. When Dr. Stockmann discovers the contamination of the Baths, Peter Stockmann has his reputation and that of the town to protect, and because he understands the might of the majority, he dupes them into supporting him reject Dr. stockmann’s noble discovery.

2. Because of their gullible nature, the town’s people fall prey to Peter Stockmann’s manipulations and they eventually side with him in rejecting Dr. Stockmann’s discovery.

3. Peter Stockmann rejects Dr. Stockmann’s report not because it is an exaggeration or imagination as he wants us to believe but because his own interests are under duress. His claims that image of the town are under threat is therefore a falsehood.

4. He corrupts the journalists to publish an untrue report on the baths and reject Dr. Stockmann’s accurate discovery.

5. He cheated town’s people that once the baths are closed for two years, they would not get any revenue for that period. The public were made to believe this even though they were to take contaminated water hence they (towns people) would contract diseases.

6. He also told them that the amount of money required to repair the baths (40 – 50,000 dollars) is not currently available. So it is the town’s people who will pay for the same hence will be costly to them.

7. He also pretends to love his brother but engineers his sacking and still has the audacity to deliver the dismissal letter himself pretending to be sorry for the sacking and blaming it on others, yet he is the all-powerful mayor and chairman of the Baths committee. Shamelessly, he emplores his brother to compromise his hard-line stance and write a note of apology in exchange for his job.

Conclusion – Justify the character of Peter Stockmann as not considerate and charitable but cunning and sadistic.

Introduction (2mks)

The strongest man in the world is he who stands alone. This is referring to Dr. Stockman. He has been declared “An enemy of the people” because of speaking the truth. The masses are influenced by Peter Stockman, but Dr. Stockman stood to his ground alone and fought for the truth, to inform the public about the state of the Baths.

Content: (12mks)

2. He makes a great discovery about the Baths, which are currently the main artery of the town’s life blood. The Baths have become poisoned and are causing diseases like typhoid.

   “The whole Bath establishment is a whitened, poisoned sepulcher, 2 tell you the gravest possible danger to the public health.” --(pg17)

   This marks the beginning of his problems with the Municipal Council. The report indicates that bacteria have got into the popes thereby contaminating the water source. He sacrifices all his energy for the sake of his society, the invalids and visitors who have been using contaminated water source. He therefore stood alone to support the renovation of the Baths system.

3. He is humiliated publicly in the meeting at the town hall and called “an enemy of the people”. The masses intimidated him but he stood for the truth alone.

Introduction
Racial biasness is the discrimination of people based on their skin colour difference like white against the blacks. This habit if found where there are mixed races all over the world

A relevant example would suffice

Body
Narrator’s teacher says that only a few years ago blacks walked around on all fours, like wild animals.

This sentiment suggests that blacks just developed a few years ago. They have not taken a longer time to differentiate themselves from the wild animals. They are not far removed from the wild animals. This evidence racial negative racial biasness on the Africans/blacks

Father Christiano’s reference to the narrator that they are hopeless and the even the blacks are better than them denotes racial biasness

Dona Dore said that God made their hands lighter so that they would not dirty the food thy made for their master. This sentiment present a black person as a servant or servitude

Senhor Antunes believes that the blacks’ hand held on while they baked in the heavenly kiln. He also says that moulding of the black creatures were done in a hurry – a statement that suggests racial biasness.

Senhor Frias told the narrator that the blocks were made at a time when the water in the lake was very cold. so when they were told to bathe they only wet the palms of their hands and the soles of their feet. Due to this, their hands are lighter. There is insinuation that blacks are lazy according to Frias.

Narrator claims that he has read in a book that blacks spent their lives bent over gathering the white cotton of virgina which made their palms white. But Esterfania says their palms were bleach by washing

Conclusion
The ideas given by the teacher, father Christiano, Dona Dore, Antanes and Frias about the palm of the blacks is showing racial biasness. There is not truth in them but just an expression of racial prejudice

ABSOLUTE POWER CORRUPTS ABSOLUTELY
i. Absolute control of resources and facilities. Halima ensures that the citizens drink water from two reservoirs (centralized water) and one slaughter house – other slaughter houses are closed down. The lido (public beach) is closed down as it swarms with non-eating sharks that kill a number of people. People stopped going to the beach
ii. Shortages of all basic commodities- she advises the leaders to create shortages. This kept people busy struggling for survival. They did not have time or energy to spare worrying about the goings on in the government
iii. Clinging to power- use of unorthodox methods to remain in power e.g. Taheel (spells) creation of shortages, nepotism, murder
N/B : Nearly twenty years have passed since Halima first went to the city. The clan has been about thirty years

Introduction
An attempt should be made to enumerate the expected ills in society

Points
(i) Saida — Hagi — Dine Herzi is opposed to religious believe that give rise to misleading superstitions. When Halima is declared to be possessed by a ‘Jinni’, she becomes. Famous throughout the village. She convinces herself that it is true and she begins acting as one who can foretell the future and cure the sick. The whole community blindly, believes in her powers. People turn to ‘Jinnis’ for help and protection. Maintaining the ‘Jinnis’ is expensive because when animals’ sacrifices are given the Jinni twins’ must get a share. The writer is ridiculing such practices where Halima’s special powers are used in the capital in order for the clan to hold senior positions in government and ate very rich, While at the capital Halirna request the leaders of the clan to bring all the water resources of the city into one central pool to facilitate the performing of the ‘Tahleel’. She also requested the building of a huge slaughterhouse at the Eastern shore. All other sources were destroyed to ensure that residents drank ‘Tahleel’ water. The effect was to make people ‘model subjects’ who never questioned the excesses their leaders. When the slaughter house went into operation all other slaughter houses were closed down. Since it is built near Lido, a popular bench front, the waste attracted man — eating sharks which killed a number of people. The effect was that people stopped going to the bench. The writer is then against

(ii) Policies that, benefit an individual against the common good of the society Saida Herzi is also critical of nepotism and clannisni. She portrays a society where majority of the citizens do not have access to the national cake. The state is run as a private firm owned by one clan. The clan members consider kinship in their allocation of senior government positions. Halima’s brother is made head of the government Incense - Agency. She makes this domination of an entire country by one clan, a laughing stock.

(iii) ‘Government. by magic spell’, condemns economic sabotage and mismanagement. The have live in beautiful villas with servant and security guards. They enrich themselves using state resources. Members of the leader’s families grow immensely rich while the majority struggle to make ends meet. Halima’s ‘spell’ on the leaders discourages free enterprise as private water sources and slaughterhouses are closed down. This reflects very poorly on the overall economic development of the country at large. This is indeed abuse of power satirized as the leadership is dominated by people from the same clan Expect 3x4

Conclusion
The ills are as a result of greed and narrow — mindedness from the leaders. They do not even respect human life and they can even get away with murder. This explains why we need a serious indictment on the quality and suitability of our leaders. (2mks) Language - Grammar paragraphing and presentation •

6. Drawing illustrations from John Ruganda’s ‘Shreds of Tenderness’, write an essay in support of this statement: “John Ruganda has successfully used the style play within a play in his book Shreds of tenderness”

Points:
- He has succeeded in using the style play within a play to enhance plot
- At the beginning Odie and Stella slide into subject leader role (1mk)
- Odie talks to senior on phone (1mk)
- Odie acts as constable and Wak as his boss and Stella acts as a refugee (1mk)

• The style has also been used successfully to develop the character traits of the various characters
  - As Odie acts as constable, his character trait is brought out as being dictatorial, cruel, authoritative (1mk). When he acts as the police, he is portrayed as cruel and immoral
  - When Wak acts as the boss, his character trait is brought out as immoral and cruel (1mk)
When Stella acts as the refugee, her character trait is brought out as abusive (1mk) she calls Wak and Odie as sniffing like a dog on heat

- Play within a play is used to develop themes
  - The theme of betrayal is brought out when Odie calls a senior government officer and gives information about Wak’s lecture on democracy (1mk)
  - The theme of immorality is highlighted as Odie acts as the police and Wak acts as the boss and both of them are portrayed as being immoral (1mk)
  - The theme of dictatorship is highlighted as Odie the constable dictate terms (1mk). Wak the boss is also dictatorial (1mk)

- Play within play has been used successfully to develop other styles
  - When Odie acts an informed on Wak, he says Wak gives a lecture about boss (leader) selling staple food to South Africa, has built a skyscraper and carried out slave. This brings irony as a style. The statement said is ironical of the boss.
  - The style Allegory is brought out when the character are used to represent virtue and vice, for example Wak stands for cowardice (1mk), Stella stands for peace making (1mk)
  - Humour is highlighted as the character takes their different roles

7. With close reference to the play ‘Shreds of Tenderness’, show why the title of the text is a suitable one.

Introduction

The term ‘Shreds of tenderness’ simply means lack of gentleness or care when dealing with someone or something. It implies lack of love for one’s neighbour. (Consider any other contextualized or general introduction)

The title ‘shreds of tenderness’ is appropriate because:
- The play explores Odie’s lack of tenderness toward his brother Wak. Odie betrays him to the SRB and is ready to fake Wak’s death, and even puts his obituary in the papers, just to inherit their father’s property alone.
- Brings out Odie’s lack of tenderness towards his sister, Stella. He treats her very roughly and is insensitive to her feelings.
- The play explores Stella’s lack of tenderness towards her father. She is having an affair with Major General Ali, who signed her father’s death warrant.
- The play explores lack of tenderness in the way refugees are treated in their host country by everyone, including the sweepers, the police and their professional colleagues. They insult them and mistreat them even denying them basic human rights.
- The play explores lack of tenderness by Odie’s father. He openly favoured Wak and Stella as they were growing up without caring Odie’s feelings and even disinherits Odie for no good reason. This is in spite of Odie being older than Wak.
- The play explores the lack of tenderness by the soldiers who raided Stella’s school and brutalized the nuns and the students. This is in spite of their profession that requires them to protect such person.
The play also explores the lack of tenderness by the state authorities towards the citizens. This is demonstrated in Odie’s experiments. The state is unconcerned about their plight and deaf to the cries of the citizens.

The play explores the lack of tenderness towards those who are coming back from refuge. Those who remained in the country treat them with disdain and make it difficult for them to settle down.

Conclusion: John Ruganda has successfully presented to the reader a society without love. The players in the text handle and mistreat each other roughly portraying a society on the brink of collapse.

- Women are often physically assaulted (pg 11) by men because they are weak physically
  E.g. when Stella tries to stop Odie from performing the experiments (She wants to smash the jars), Odie grabs her fists and throws her violently to the ground. Violence is meted on the women.

vi) Inheritance:-
- As far as inheritance is concerned, women/girls are discriminated against. Nothing is bequeathed to Stella. She inherits none of her father’s property.
- NB: It is Wak and Odie fighting over property (pg 20).
  (Quote p 20)
  “…………………. As the next of kin, Odie as the next male relative you stood to benefit………

vii) Abandonment:
- Often women are left lonely/become bread winners when husbands flee as refugees e.g. Wak’s family suffer viii) Victims of family break-ups/rivalries

- Stella is caught/torn between the two fighting brothers i.e. Wak and Odie. As she tries to pacify them, she gets hurt. She suffers physically and emotionally

Conclusion:-
It is from the forgoing that women are the greatest sufferers. Therefore civil strife should be avoided and women should play a greater role in ensuring that peace and stability prevails.

Write an essay on ironies in Shreds of Tenderness using at least 4 illustrations of irony

- Introduction – Irony is to do the opposite of what is expected
- Odie presents himself as aggrieved by the fact that Wak had fled the country for he is a great patriot yet he is the one who forced him to flee after he had betrayed him to the dictatorial regime that ruled the country then
- There is a dramatic irony when Odie re-enacts in a sort of reverie his earlier conversation with the Major General Ali of the state Research Bureau in the presence of Wak. It is in that conversation that he told on his brother Wak. He said that Wak was involved in activities that opposed the oppressive government of the time and he was about to present a talk that would set the people against the military government
There is also dramatic irony in the act of soldiers sent to arrest Wak. They come across him and unaware that it is him that they are looking for, they ask him to direct them to himself. As a result, he learns that he is being sought and misleads them and flees.

There is verbal irony in Odie’s words after Stella asks Wak where he has been and Odie intersects saying sarcastically that he was serving the nation and that returnees are itching to reconcile, reconstruct and rehabilitate.

It is ironical that Odie who keeps trying to humiliate Wak by portraying him as a failure in chaos that rocked the country is one who ends up being embarrassed. It is proved that he was a traitor and was responsible for the troubles that Wak had with the government and which forced him to flee for his life.

13. “Odie is his own enemy”. Write a composition to validate the truth of this statement in relation to Shreds of Tenderness

Introduction:
Odie goes through many problems e.g. insecurity i.e. feel & his life is in danger, he has been tortured before being alcoholic and others. Many of his predicaments are self imposed due to his behaviour or what he does.
- While his father was alive he did not relate well with him
- He failed in his studies unlike Wak
- He misused family property
- He cheated that Walt was dead and arranged a mock funeral,
- He was arrested and tortured for giving ‘misleading’ information especially when Wak escaped

Conclusion:
Candidate must indicate that Odie would not have been as he is were it not for what has been discussed

The pivotal role of the girl child

  - Gives Wak food despite Odie’s protests
(ii) Loving – She ironically loves Wak more than she loves her real brother Odie.
  - She loves Major General Ali regardless of the negative things associated with him.
(iii) Women exercise restraint. As a girl officer, Stella resists attempts to kill the Queen mother saying that she is a woman like her.
(iv) Women are also reconciliators and voices of reason as they play reconciliatory roles at moments of crisis/conflicts.

(vi) - Women are known for neutrality
  - She defends Wak against accusation about betrayal from Odie
  - She also defends Odie when Wak almost shot him
(any other relevant points can be accepted.)

7. Specifically focusing on Brenda in the novel, ‘Homestretch’ by Velma Pollard; Write a composition to illustrate how early childhood experiences shape one’s perception of life.

Optional set text
Specifically focusing on Brenda in the novel ‘Homestretch by Velma Pollard, write a composition to illustrate how early childhood experiences shape one’s perception of life.

Introduction
The way a person responds or relates to issues in life is many times determined by the experiences he or she had encountered in life. If a person has suffered from discrimination and mistreatment, he or she is likely to be suspicious of other people’s motives and actions. Then such a person is likely to be aggressive and confrontational.

When we first meet Brenda in the novel she is having confrontation with a customs official at the airport and she is quite negative towards the officials. A lot of this can be explained when we look at her earlier life.

- Brenda moved to the U.S in her teens to live with a father she barely knew. She suffered harassment from Johnie and her daughter at home, and she found a lot of trouble adjusting at school.
- She relocates to England and she has to readjust to another of her father’s ‘women and to high school in a third country. She had no control over her life. She was tense at the thought of another adjustment to a different school.
- She suffers prejudice at college because of being black and speaking in an American accent. She was shy and insecure. She appeared proud to the Jamaicans because of her accent.
- She tries to be different and gangs jump with Africans but she gets disappointed by her Nigerian boyfriend.
- At the end of it, Brenda didn’t have even one positive word to say about England.
- When we first meet her, her frustrations come out in form of anger, confrontation and unrealistic ideals. She is unhappy with the customs officers with the drivers on the roads, and with the environment.

Conclusion: Thus Brenda’s view of reality has been distorted by the emotional hurts she has gone through as a result of the discrimination in the US and in England.

Elsewhere Brenda reveals open racism while she searched for a job. Whites have one place for blacks — the ground floor, manual work. Anthony also comments that America think about colour everyday.

Loneliness — David and Edith work for the motherland but never get to belong this society. The working life is demanding to the extent of alienating David and Edith from each other. The had no time to sit, chat and interact with people. The only thing they common with white man is work. Brenda it as well haunted by feelings of rejection, placeless and homelessness as he leaves Jamaica before she calls it home and in America she is a stranger to the father, stepmother and stepsister.

Weather — When Brenda retreats to England she finds the place cold and unbearable. It rained most of the time.

Sickness! mental torture — Due to the experiences of discrimination and exploitation it is clear that those who go to America don’t return while normal. For example David returns on a wheelchair while others like Miss Betty’s daughter and Miss Gerald’s son are mad.
