Once upon a time, the hare was caught stealing yams. The people took him to the village and tied him to a pole. All the people came to see the thief who had been a menace to their farms. The hare felt very embarrassed. Then they decided to kill him, and the best way to do it, they all agreed was to build a fire round him and roast him alive. So off they went to collect firewood.

While the people had gone to collect firewood, leaving the hare alone, the jackal, who was looking for people's leftovers, happened to pass near the place where the hare was tied. The hare saw him and called him over. The jackal came and was astonished to find his friend there.

"Why have you been tied up?" He asked "Oh, it is simple," the hare replied. "The people of the village are preparing a feast for me. They have killed two cows and four goats and there is also some beer ready. They've tied me because I don't want to join their feast. They want to make sure I don't run away."
