2 Parsimei Ole Kaelo had recently been retrenched by the company he had worked for for twenty-two years. After losing his job, the family's stay in Nakuru became untenable. It had been their source of livelihood and going back to Nasila was an attempt to begin exploring other options in order to provide for his family.

2) The elder ^{was} in the ^{head} of the family in the absence of the father - Ole Kaelo
 (d) This community celebrated family reunions. There seems to be such genuine jubilation that Parsimei's daughters are overwhelmed. The community defined a successful man as one who had many wives and children, especially male offspring. In addition, the community expected members to strictly observe the customs and traditions. Simiren had won the respect of the elders because he did what was expected. Finally we learn the society conducted ceremonies like initiations for girls and circumcision for boys.

- xi) Livestock keepers
 - xii) They valued honesty

 e) - What Simiren did not do then and would not do now is to argue with him!
 - What Simiren did not do was argue with him then nor would he do
 - What Simiren did not do then, and would not do now, is to argue with him

(f) This means that Ole Kaelo looked very impressive, in fact, awe inspiring, but that impression was false. He was actually a weakling. He had no solid foundation. He was not well grounded in his culture. Ole Kaelo's situation is vulnerable, he has only one wife and two daughters who cannot continue his lineage despite ^{being wealthy impressive high status} ^{(one wife) - monogamy} ^{(2 daughters) - straw} ^{(wealth/poor) - giant}

(g) The last paragraph implies that girls were married off at a very young age. Although Parsimei's daughters are in their early twenties, their uncle thinks "they should have left home long ago."
 - Girls are expected to be circumcised. Uncircumcised girls are a disgrace to their father.
 - Uncircumcised girls are alienated by the society - girls are expected to be circumcised by the society
